A Few Complaints

While we wait for the release of the MIT Commission report (and the final figures on commons), it seems appropriate to call attention to a few of the problems pestering MIT students. Non-would merit a demonstration outside President Johnson's office, but perhaps we can stir the student body to "powers that be" to remedy the situation.

The failure of this fall's TCA charity drive is disheartening. Past efforts netted $2,000 from the Tech, but this year's event has produced a bare $500. TCA will accept contributions for any charity; their appeal should be broad enough to gain support from a larger segment of the student body and faculty. The drive will continue in Building 10 through tomorrow afternoon.

Problems are developing with the MIT-Wellesley bus service. Riders have registered three complaints: 1) there is no bus stop in the MIT west campus area; 2) the busses are often late, and 3) some MIT students cross-registered for Wellesley courses have been refused a ride because the bus was already full. Non-would merit a demonstration outside President Johnson's office, but perhaps we can stir the student body to "powers that be" to remedy the situation.

For some time now, Dining Service has been under scrutiny. A crew of volunteer commoners for the Ad Hoc Dining Service Committee was assured last year that we would have a more reasonable price structure this year, now Dining Service is talking in terms of another price increase.

Part of the problem is that the Institute is running out of money; the TCA drive this year was only a few hundred dollars short of the still-unknown goal. For, as Dean Nyhart has said, this is not a "technical" problem; the institute does not smile on the idea, and makes it unpleasant for the people who want to spend the money, and as long as anything when we wait for the release of the MIT Corporation's financial report for the past fiscal year.
