and development. Engineers have had to reorient themselves to intensified competition and rapidly getting new products on the market for their employers. Those who have been able to keep jobs have been "working engineers who can turn a quick profit for the company," he said. "They have also warned those considering consulting to become good salesmen." He explained that while a student was perfectly free to carry over his course work in January, professors were not.

Professor of Nuclear Engineering Kent Hansen, a member of the CEP's subcommittee for curriculum, noted that the continuation of course work into January was certain a legitimate faculty activity. He explained that many faculty and students in his department were taking advantage of the term to complete course projects, which, he noted, are frequently turned into thesis topics.
