I get the full benefit of their involvement in such projects. Not all students who become deeply subsidizes many activities such as productions and so on. I have found that it is realistic or desirable to try to prevent them from becoming involved in the course. For example, if a student were forced to take a course in one subject area, they might not be able to take another course that better suits their interests. I think that students should be given the freedom to choose which courses to take, based on their abilities and interests. Some students might be more interested in developing their skills in a particular area, while others might prefer to take a course that will help them develop their general knowledge. I believe that it is important for students to have some control over their education, and that they should be encouraged to take courses that they find interesting and challenging. Notice others One thing that is important is that each shy and lonely student tries to notice his fellow students; he may have friends who are much more interested in the topics covered in class. But this can be hard for him, as they are often shy and isolated. Maybe he could force himself to try to help? Before we consid...
