The anti-war movement reached the campus Thursday with a Boston-wide meeting to discuss anti-war actions. A mix-up in the Student Center Tuesday delayed the final approval of the Sao de Puerto Rico for the meeting until late in the afternoon, and might have resulted in a re-rally, according to a series of reports announced at Wednesday's rally, had been cancelled.

The group opened with reports from people who had attended the proceeding week's war conference in Ann Arbor, Michigan. The conference, it was reported, had ended so-called People to People Treaty. It had also made plans for specific anti-war actions in May, with "massive, non-violent, coordinated, and militant" demonstrations in Washington, D.C.

Another concern had emphasized the importance of looking at the war not as a single issue but as part of a larger concept, putting it together with racism and sexism as well as to the black Panthers Bobby Seale and Angela Davis as racism as well as to the trial of B. W. Johnson.
