There's been nothing of overwhelming interest or importance at MIT during the past week, so we decided to reserve today's editorial comment for some of the little things that have developed.

The Tech will treat Friday night as an excellent handled attack on our war policy. Rather than adopting an emotional or demagogic style, the speakers were careful to stress the dangers facing humanity much for the war campaign. As Jack McNeese, NUC moderator, pointed out, a traditional teach-in is not necessary to stress the importance of policy developments. Hopefully NUC and other peace groups will experiment with off-campus teach-ins as well.

We understand that several faculty and administrators thought The Tech special several days ago demonstrated dishonesty and poor consideration for the best interests of MIT. One of these men, presumably urging a general policy, had this information, should you have asked the administration whether it was appropriate to release it. We might note in passing that some faculty were at the Tech faculty meeting to discuss their ideas during the Tech's time out.

For the past year, the MIT corridors have been filled with questions and action to fight the war. Moreover, some peoples committed to expansion, and leaders and some countries want new areas. By 1974 they will pass us away involved in a situation so frightening and dangerous for the whole world. MIT-Wellesley Exchange plan originated with the MIT-Wellesley Exchange Committee. Other students and groups will experiment with off-campus teach-ins, hopefully NUC and other peace groups. Perhaps no editorial comment is necessary, but we couldn't resist adding emphasis: the fault is ours.

The older a nation and a people become, the more they become conscious of history and also of what is possible. Now I know that some nationalities have hated each other for years, and we, are printing the more telling paragraphs. Perhaps no editorial comment is necessary, but we couldn't resist adding emphasis: the fault is ours.

I know that some national leaders and some countries want to expand by conquest and are committed to expansion, and this will create the danger of war. Moreover, some peoples have hated each other for years and years.

Look at the divided peoples of India and Pakistan. Look at the situation in the Middle East. You can't suddenly eliminate these differences, these hatreds, just because some political leaders get together. All you can hope to do is to add a little to their live-and-let-live situation.

I am deeply devoted to a desire that the United States should make the greatest possible contribution it can to making such a peaceful world.

It is not enough just to be for peace. The point is, what can we do about it?

At a meeting of the editorial board on Monday night, we decided to publish the following editorial, which was submitted by Brant Parham and Johnny Hart. The Editorial Team, by Brant Parham and Johnny Hart, decided to publish the following editorial, which was submitted by Brant Parham and Johnny Hart.

Elected editor... Last week President Nixon gave us an in-forma speech in the ceremonial atrium of the National Press Club, where he said that the New York Times had an unfair character. In his remarks, we are printing the more telling paragraphs. Perhaps no editorial comment is necessary, but we couldn't resist adding emphasis: the fault is ours.

The older a nation and a people become, the more they become conscious of history and also of what is possible. Now I know that some nationalities have hated each other for years, and we, are printing the more telling paragraphs. Perhaps no editorial comment is necessary, but we couldn't resist adding emphasis: the fault is ours.

I know that some national leaders and some countries want to expand by conquest and are committed to expansion, and this will create the danger of war. Moreover, some peoples have hated each other for years and years.

Look at the divided peoples of India and Pakistan. Look at the situation in the Middle East. You can't suddenly eliminate these differences, these hatreds, just because some political leaders get together. All you can hope to do is to add a little to their live-and-let-live situation.

We decided to publish the following editorial, which was submitted by Brant Parham and Johnny Hart. The Editorial Team, by Brant Parham and Johnny Hart, decided to publish the following editorial, which was submitted by Brant Parham and Johnny Hart.

The older a nation and a people become, the more they become conscious of history and also of what is possible. Now I know that some nationalities have hated each other for years, and we, are printing the more telling paragraphs. Perhaps no editorial comment is necessary, but we couldn't resist adding emphasis: the fault is ours.

The older a nation and a people become, the more they become conscious of history and also of what is possible. Now I know that some nationalities have hated each other for years, and we, are printing the more telling paragraphs. Perhaps no editorial comment is necessary, but we couldn't resist adding emphasis: the fault is ours.

I know that some national leaders and some countries want to expand by conquest and are committed to expansion, and this will create the danger of war. Moreover, some peoples have hated each other for years and years.

Look at the divided peoples of India and Pakistan. Look at the situation in the Middle East. You can't suddenly eliminate these differences, these hatreds, just because some political leaders get together. All you can hope to do is to add a little to their live-and-let-live situation.

We decided to publish the following editorial, which was submitted by Brant Parham and Johnny Hart. The Editorial Team, by Brant Parham and Johnny Hart, decided to publish the following editorial, which was submitted by Brant Parham and Johnny Hart.

The older a nation and a people become, the more they become conscious of history and also of what is possible. Now I know that some nationalities have hated each other for years, and we, are printing the more telling paragraphs. Perhaps no editorial comment is necessary, but we couldn't resist adding emphasis: the fault is ours.

The older a nation and a people become, the more they become conscious of history and also of what is possible. Now I know that some nationalities have hated each other for years, and we, are printing the more telling paragraphs. Perhaps no editorial comment is necessary, but we couldn't resist adding emphasis: the fault is ours.

I know that some national leaders and some countries want to expand by conquest and are committed to expansion, and this will create the danger of war. Moreover, some peoples have hated each other for years and years.

Look at the divided peoples of India and Pakistan. Look at the situation in the Middle East. You can't suddenly eliminate these differences, these hatreds, just because some political leaders get together. All you can hope to do is to add a little to their live-and-let-live situation.

We decided to publish the following editorial, which was submitted by Brant Parham and Johnny Hart. The Editorial Team, by Brant Parham and Johnny Hart, decided to publish the following editorial, which was submitted by Brant Parham and Johnny Hart.

The older a nation and a people become, the more they become conscious of history and also of what is possible. Now I know that some nationalities have hated each other for years, and we, are printing the more telling paragraphs. Perhaps no editorial comment is necessary, but we couldn't resist adding emphasis: the fault is ours.

The older a nation and a people become, the more they become conscious of history and also of what is possible. Now I know that some nationalities have hated each other for years, and we, are printing the more telling paragraphs. Perhaps no editorial comment is necessary, but we couldn't resist adding emphasis: the fault is ours.

I know that some national leaders and some countries want to expand by conquest and are committed to expansion, and this will create the danger of war. Moreover, some peoples have hated each other for years and years.

Look at the divided peoples of India and Pakistan. Look at the situation in the Middle East. You can't suddenly eliminate these differences, these hatreds, just because some political leaders get together. All you can hope to do is to add a little to their live-and-let-live situation.

We decided to publish the following editorial, which was submitted by Brant Parham and Johnny Hart. The Editorial Team, by Brant Parham and Johnny Hart, decided to publish the following editorial, which was submitted by Brant Parham and Johnny Hart.