Stipends will support summer community work.

By Dave Searls

The last excuse for scale that the MIT Gilbert and Sullivan Society has effectively abolished.

A program of summer grants, notes Dr. Len Menand, will enable 10 to 14 MIT students to work in the area of community affairs. A continuation of funds that were last coordinated with the Urban Action organization, the summer program is now being managed only by the MIT administration.

The grants are made possible through a special President's Fund for Community Affairs, reasonably explained Dr. Menand, as "a source of feedback from the community." Human, in previous years, the work went for work to be done by the Urban Action Fellows program, the decision was made by a steering committee each year to "open the program to the community, so that people with a serious idea can compete for the funds."

Stipends will be made available to the community, so that people with a serious idea can compete for the funds. "Stipends are being solicited for the Urban Action Fellows program, the decision was made by a special President's Committee. "We want this to be an intervention with the community," explained Dr. Menand. "We want the student's work to be a joint effort, so that it is not just the academic end or the people, but both groups. Consequently, we expect that, in many cases, his activities will be cooperation with agencies that are already providing some service to the Riverside agency or the various tenants organizations." It will be up to the applicant to find a suitable advisor, who may or may not be a member of the MIT faculty in cases where community-based professional workers are involved, all that is required are letters of sponsorship and periodic contact with the MIT administration.

Another stipulation for those wishing to obtain grants is that their project "must be conducted with the assistance and guidance of at least one advisor competent in the field and committed to giving some substantive direction during the summer." It is left up to the applicant to find a suitable advisor, who may or may not be a member of the MIT faculty in cases where community-based professional workers are involved, all that is required are letters of sponsorship and periodic contact with the MIT administration.

Community interaction: "We want this to be an intervention with the community," explained Dr. Menand. "We want the student's work to be a joint effort, so that it is not just the academic end or the people, but both groups. Consequently, we expect that, in many cases, his activities will be cooperation with agencies that are already providing some service to the Riverside agency or the various tenants organizations." It will be up to the applicant to find a suitable advisor, who may or may not be a member of the MIT faculty in cases where community-based professional workers are involved, all that is required are letters of sponsorship and periodic contact with the MIT administration.

Proposal: Proposals are being solicited for the Urban Action Fellows program, the decision was made by a steering committee each year to "open the program to the community, so that people with a serious idea can compete for the funds." "Stipends are being solicited for the Urban Action Fellows program, the decision was made by a special President's Committee. "We want this to be an intervention with the community," explained Dr. Menand. "We want the student's work to be a joint effort, so that it is not just the academic end or the people, but both groups. Consequently, we expect that, in many cases, his activities will be cooperation with agencies that are already providing some service to the Riverside agency or the various tenants organizations." It will be up to the applicant to find a suitable advisor, who may or may not be a member of the MIT faculty in cases where community-based professional workers are involved, all that is required are letters of sponsorship and periodic contact with the MIT administration.

Summer's budget: "Community interaction: "We want this to be an intervention with the community," explained Dr. Menand. "We want the student's work to be a joint effort, so that it is not just the academic end or the people, but both groups. Consequently, we expect that, in many cases, his activities will be cooperation with agencies that are already providing some service to the Riverside agency or the various tenants organizations." It will be up to the applicant to find a suitable advisor, who may or may not be a member of the MIT faculty in cases where community-based professional workers are involved, all that is required are letters of sponsorship and periodic contact with the MIT administration.

The last excuse for scale that the MIT Gilbert and Sullivan Society has effectively abolished.

A program of summer grants, notes Dr. Len Menand, will enable 10 to 14 MIT students to work in the area of community affairs. A continuation of funds that were last coordinated with the Urban Action organization, the summer program is now being managed only by the MIT administration.

The grants are made possible through a special President's Fund for Community Affairs, reasonably explained Dr. Menand, as "a source of feedback from the community." Human, in previous years, the work went for work to be done by the Urban Action Fellows program, the decision was made by a steering committee each year to "open the program to the community, so that people with a serious idea can compete for the funds."

Stipends will be made available to the community, so that people with a serious idea can compete for the funds. "Stipends are being solicited for the Urban Action Fellows program, the decision was made by a special President's Committee. "We want this to be an intervention with the community," explained Dr. Menand. "We want the student's work to be a joint effort, so that it is not just the academic end or the people, but both groups. Consequently, we expect that, in many cases, his activities will be cooperation with agencies that are already providing some service to the Riverside agency or the various tenants organizations." It will be up to the applicant to find a suitable advisor, who may or may not be a member of the MIT faculty in cases where community-based professional workers are involved, all that is required are letters of sponsorship and periodic contact with the MIT administration.

Another stipulation for those wishing to obtain grants is that their project "must be conducted with the assistance and guidance of at least one advisor competent in the field and committed to giving some substantive direction during the summer." It is left up to the applicant to find a suitable advisor, who may or may not be a member of the MIT faculty in cases where community-based professional workers are involved, all that is required are letters of sponsorship and periodic contact with the MIT administration.

Community interaction: "We want this to be an intervention with the community," explained Dr. Menand. "We want the student's work to be a joint effort, so that it is not just the academic end or the people, but both groups. Consequently, we expect that, in many cases, his activities will be cooperation with agencies that are already providing some service to the Riverside agency or the various tenants organizations." It will be up to the applicant to find a suitable advisor, who may or may not be a member of the MIT faculty in cases where community-based professional workers are involved, all that is required are letters of sponsorship and periodic contact with the MIT administration.

Proposal: Proposals are being solicited for the Urban Action Fellows program, the decision was made by a steering committee each year to "open the program to the community, so that people with a serious idea can compete for the funds." "Stipends are being solicited for the Urban Action Fellows program, the decision was made by a special President's Committee. "We want this to be an intervention with the community," explained Dr. Menand. "We want the student's work to be a joint effort, so that it is not just the academic end or the people, but both groups. Consequently, we expect that, in many cases, his activities will be cooperation with agencies that are already providing some service to the Riverside agency or the various tenants organizations." It will be up to the applicant to find a suitable advisor, who may or may not be a member of the MIT faculty in cases where community-based professional workers are involved, all that is required are letters of sponsorship and periodic contact with the MIT administration.

Summer's budget: "Community interaction: "We want this to be an intervention with the community," explained Dr. Menand. "We want the student's work to be a joint effort, so that it is not just the academic end or the people, but both groups. Consequently, we expect that, in many cases, his activities will be cooperation with agencies that are already providing some service to the Riverside agency or the various tenants organizations." It will be up to the applicant to find a suitable advisor, who may or may not be a member of the MIT faculty in cases where community-based professional workers are involved, all that is required are letters of sponsorship and periodic contact with the MIT administration.

The last excuse for scale that the MIT Gilbert and Sullivan Society has effectively abolished.

A program of summer grants, notes Dr. Len Menand, will enable 10 to 14 MIT students to work in the area of community affairs. A continuation of funds that were last coordinated with the Urban Action organization, the summer program is now being managed only by the MIT administration.

The grants are made possible through a special President's Fund for Community Affairs, reasonably explained Dr. Menand, as "a source of feedback from the community." Human, in previous years, the work went for work to be done by the Urban Action Fellows program, the decision was made by a steering committee each year to "open the program to the community, so that people with a serious idea can compete for the funds."

Stipends will be made available to the community, so that people with a serious idea can compete for the funds. "Stipends are being solicited for the Urban Action Fellows program, the decision was made by a special President's Committee. "We want this to be an intervention with the community," explained Dr. Menand. "We want the student's work to be a joint effort, so that it is not just the academic end or the people, but both groups. Consequently, we expect that, in many cases, his activities will be cooperation with agencies that are already providing some service to the Riverside agency or the various tenants organizations." It will be up to the applicant to find a suitable advisor, who may or may not be a member of the MIT faculty in cases where community-based professional workers are involved, all that is required are letters of sponsorship and periodic contact with the MIT administration.

Another stipulation for those wishing to obtain grants is that their project "must be conducted with the assistance and guidance of at least one advisor competent in the field and committed to giving some substantive direction during the summer." It is left up to the applicant to find a suitable advisor, who may or may not be a member of the MIT faculty in cases where community-based professional workers are involved, all that is required are letters of sponsorship and periodic contact with the MIT administration.

Community interaction: "We want this to be an intervention with the community," explained Dr. Menand. "We want the student's work to be a joint effort, so that it is not just the academic end or the people, but both groups. Consequently, we expect that, in many cases, his activities will be cooperation with agencies that are already providing some service to the Riverside agency or the various tenants organizations." It will be up to the applicant to find a suitable advisor, who may or may not be a member of the MIT faculty in cases where community-based professional workers are involved, all that is required are letters of sponsorship and periodic contact with the MIT administration.

Proposal: Proposals are being solicited for the Urban Action Fellows program, the decision was made by a steering committee each year to "open the program to the community, so that people with a serious idea can compete for the funds." "Stipends are being solicited for the Urban Action Fellows program, the decision was made by a special President's Committee. "We want this to be an intervention with the community," explained Dr. Menand. "We want the student's work to be a joint effort, so that it is not just the academic end or the people, but both groups. Consequently, we expect that, in many cases, his activities will be cooperation with agencies that are already providing some service to the Riverside agency or the various tenants organizations." It will be up to the applicant to find a suitable advisor, who may or may not be a member of the MIT faculty in cases where community-based professional workers are involved, all that is required are letters of sponsorship and periodic contact with the MIT administration.

Summer's budget: "Community interaction: "We want this to be an intervention with the community," explained Dr. Menand. "We want the student's work to be a joint effort, so that it is not just the academic end or the people, but both groups. Consequently, we expect that, in many cases, his activities will be cooperation with agencies that are already providing some service to the Riverside agency or the various tenants organizations." It will be up to the applicant to find a suitable advisor, who may or may not be a member of the MIT faculty in cases where community-based professional workers are involved, all that is required are letters of sponsorship and periodic contact with the MIT administration.