A column on things

By Paul Schindler

Last Saturday, there was a rally in Washington, D.C. A lot of people came. We all missed you.

The atmosphere was something like a cross between a police clampdown and a carnival. It started and a circus when it was just wrapping up. Yet somehow, the crowd seemed to do well. I saw people all the time. Besides, good solid citizens on vacation.

To the Capitol have a reason for most as prevalent at peace. I will talk about something else only once in this piece. Instead, have been the subject of 10,000

The carnival atmosphere surrounding the march was really something to behold. Marchers wore clothes in all the colors of the rainbow and festooned with a quantity of buttons which seemed to multiply beyond all understanding (especially noteworthy in light of the fact that they were not being given away, but rather sold at 10-25 cents each). In addition, there was the usual vast quantity of pamphlets and booklets for money — all for a good cause of course. At 10 cents a throw you could spend a thousand dollars at one time.

But we all missed you. I’m told Dick even noticed you weren’t there. “As long as MIT is dormant, it doesn’t matter.”

Another Restaurant

throughout the nation’s Capitol to boggle your mind, but the single color I saw was blue. The Capitol is guarded by the Capitol itself. As one of them explained to me, “we just naturally have not been to college in a long time, because blue is the color of the club. The Club Wow. There are enough police department in the world who guard the Capitol itself. As one of them explained to me, “we just naturally have not been to college in a long time, because blue is the color of the club. The Club Wow. The Club Wow is a rendezvous for the college crowd.

I found out all of this as I stood by the fence which was put up to keep a lot of fine American citizens from getting any ideas about ripping off our fine American Capitol.

There were all sorts of inconspicuous sights: long hair anti-war vets who still managed to fall into step as they walked down Pennsylvania Avenue; a lot of bright hair in the crowd, even among people in their forties (and the 50-50 split between “kids” and “adults” at the march gathering was that it was probably the most important thing about the whole action: the fact that who cleaned and obviously have not been to college in years was in Washington to join the protest against the war.

The carnivale atmosphere surrounding the march was really something to behold. Marchers wore clothes in all the colors of the rainbow and festooned with a quantity of buttons which seemed to multiply beyond all understanding (especially noteworthy in light of the fact that they were not being given away, but rather sold at 10-25 cents each). In addition, there was the usual vast quantity of pamphlets and booklets for money — all for a good cause of course. At 10 cents a throw you could spend a thousand dollars at one time.

But we all missed you. I’m told Dick even noticed you weren’t there. “As long as MIT is dormant, it doesn’t matter.”

Another Restaurant

throughout the nation’s Capitol to boggle your mind, but the single color I saw was blue. The Capitol is guarded by the Capitol itself. As one of them explained to me, “we just naturally have not been to college in a long time, because blue is the color of the club. The Club Wow. There are enough police department in the world who guard the Capitol itself. As one of them explained to me, “we just naturally have not been to college in a long time, because blue is the color of the club. The Club Wow. The Club Wow is a rendezvous for the college crowd.

I found out all of this as I stood by the fence which was put up to keep a lot of fine American citizens from getting any ideas about ripping off our fine American Capitol.

There were all sorts of inconspicuous sights: long hair anti-war vets who still managed to fall into step as they walked down Pennsylvania Avenue; a lot of bright hair in the crowd, even among people in their forties (and the 50-50 split between “kids” and “adults” at the march gathering was that it was probably the most important thing about the whole action: the fact that who cleaned and obviously have not been to college in years was in Washington to join the protest against the war.

The carnivale atmosphere surrounding the march was really something to behold. Marchers wore clothes in all the colors of the rainbow and festooned with a quantity of buttons which seemed to multiply beyond all understanding (especially noteworthy in light of the fact that they were not being given away, but rather sold at 10-25 cents each). In addition, there was the usual vast quantity of pamphlets and booklets for money — all for a good cause of course. At 10 cents a throw you could spend a thousand dollars at one time.

But we all missed you. I’m told Dick even noticed you weren’t there. “As long as MIT is dormant, it doesn’t matter.”

Another Restaurant

throughout the nation’s Capitol to boggle your mind, but the single color I saw was blue. The Capitol is guarded by the Capitol itself. As one of them explained to me, “we just naturally have not been to college in a long time, because blue is the color of the club. The Club Wow. There are enough police department in the world who guard the Capitol itself. As one of them explained to me, “we just naturally have not been to college in a long time, because blue is the color of the club. The Club Wow. The Club Wow is a rendezvous for the college crowd.

I found out all of this as I stood by the fence which was put up to keep a lot of fine American citizens from getting any ideas about ripping off our fine American Capitol.

There were all sorts of inconspicuous sights: long hair anti-war vets who still managed to fall into step as they walked down Pennsylvania Avenue; a lot of bright hair in the crowd, even among people in their forties (and the 50-50 split between “kids” and “adults” at the march gathering was that it was probably the most important thing about the whole action: the fact that who cleaned and obviously have not been to college in years was in Washington to join the protest against the war.

The carnivale atmosphere surrounding the march was really something to behold. Marchers wore clothes in all the colors of the rainbow and festooned with a quantity of buttons which seemed to multiply beyond all understanding (especially noteworthy in light of the fact that they were not being given away, but rather sold at 10-25 cents each). In addition, there was the usual vast quantity of pamphlets and booklets for money — all for a good cause of course. At 10 cents a throw you could spend a thousand dollars at one time.

But we all missed you. I’m told Dick even noticed you weren’t there. “As long as MIT is dormant, it doesn’t matter.”

Another Restaurant

throughout the nation’s Capitol to boggle your mind, but the single color I saw was blue. The Capitol is guarded by the Capitol itself. As one of them explained to me, “we just naturally have not been to college in a long time, because blue is the color of the club. The Club Wow. There are enough police department in the world who guard the Capitol itself. As one of them explained to me, “we just naturally have not been to college in a long time, because blue is the color of the club. The Club Wow. The Club Wow is a rendezvous for the college crowd.

I found out all of this as I stood by the fence which was put up to keep a lot of fine American citizens from getting any ideas about ripping off our fine American Capitol.

There were all sorts of inconspicuous sights: long hair anti-war vets who still managed to fall into step as they walked down Pennsylvania Avenue; a lot of bright hair in the crowd, even among people in their forties (and the 50-50 split between “kids” and “adults” at the march gathering was that it was probably the most important thing about the whole action: the fact that who cleaned and obviously have not been to college in years was in Washington to join the protest against the war.

The carnivale atmosphere surrounding the march was really something to behold. Marchers wore clothes in all the colors of the rainbow and festooned with a quantity of buttons which seemed to multiply beyond all understanding (especially noteworthy in light of the fact that they were not being given away, but rather sold at 10-25 cents each). In addition, there was the usual vast quantity of pamphlets and booklets for money — all for a good cause of course. At 10 cents a throw you could spend a thousand dollars at one time.

But we all missed you. I’m told Dick even noticed you weren’t there. “As long as MIT is dormant, it doesn’t matter.”

Another Restaurant

throughout the nation’s Capitol to boggle your mind, but the single color I saw was blue. The Capitol is guarded by the Capitol itself. As one of them explained to me, “we just naturally have not been to college in a long time, because blue is the color of the club. The Club Wow. There are enough police department in the world who guard the Capitol itself. As one of them explained to me, “we just naturally have not been to college in a long time, because blue is the color of the club. The Club Wow. The Club Wow is a rendezvous for the college crowd.

I found out all of this as I stood by the fence which was put up to keep a lot of fine American citizens from getting any ideas about ripping off our fine American Capitol.

There were all sorts of inconspicuous sights: long hair anti-war vets who still managed to fall into step as they walked down Pennsylvania Avenue; a lot of bright hair in the crowd, even among people in their forties (and the 50-50 split between “kids” and “adults” at the march gathering was that it was probably the most important thing about the whole action: the fact that who cleaned and obviously have not been to college in years was in Washington to join the protest against the war.

The carnivale atmosphere surrounding the march was really something to behold. Marchers wore clothes in all the colors of the rainbow and festooned with a quantity of buttons which seemed to multiply beyond all understanding (especially noteworthy in light of the fact that they were not being given away, but rather sold at 10-25 cents each). In addition, there was the usual vast quantity of pamphlets and booklets for money — all for a good cause of course. At 10 cents a throw you could spend a thousand dollars at one time.

But we all missed you. I’m told Dick even noticed you weren’t there. “As long as MIT is dormant, it doesn’t matter.”

Another Restaurant