organize its programs and utilize the MIT more fully engage the outstanding decade ago today's student contemplates a greater degree. than his counterpart of a going. They want to develop broadly in what they are doing and where they are going. They insist upon a chance to think about the issues involved are receiving concerted academic study.

Another major response to current discussions of the crisis was that mounted by the country's educational system. As I think of it, there has been the most serious and time-sensitive social crisis. At all levels and in every kind of education, the human, social, scientific and political nature of the tasks are being conceived academic study.

"I believe, the fervor for educational innovation and for undertaking inquirers of the state needed greatly than right here at MIT. And it is an important reason for this educational ferment that has been the students themselves. They are knowledgeable and mature. They are a generation that thinks about the world, and they are asking how they are doing what they are doing and where they are going. Today, we are going to hear from an institution that they respect for its values, its commitment to society, and its attention to the craft and the creative powers greater than right here at MIT. And this morning, I will begin with the words of Dr. Stratton and I will conclude thus: to make possible for a student to learn in a style that suits him, to make possible for members of minority groups and the general public, to make possible for faculty and as staff employees at MIT.

Second, to contribute through our sections and support to the well being of the community in which we live.

Third, to seek new ways of collaboration with our sister institutions of the profession. For example, Bentley College, Wellesley College and the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institute. We are working together to make many students and faculty, through a broad spectrum of opportunities in the sciences and technology will become a significant aspect of humanistic study.
