We give results. Do they?

(Continued from page 1)

to immediate expulsion."

To explore the quality of the paper services work, the fish bought a copy of the three-page essay for $7.00 from International Research, Inc. The paper, suitable for a freshman Humanities course, was entitled "Science on Trial." Peter Herman, an instructor in the Department of Humanities, agreed to read and evaluate the paper. He agreed to "below average" and considered its interpretation of Science's behavior "extremely shaky." Herman pointed out that the paper claimed that Science "is the wisest because he knows that his wisdom is in uith worth nothing" - a complete misinterpretation of Science's basic idea.

The paper turned out to have been originally written for a tutorial in Government at spring. The Harvard grader's comments - which Herman
said were not shown - were almost exactly the same. When the author of the paper was contacted, he was amazed to learn that his paper had ended up in International's files. The paper had been a "rush job," and he had not considered it worth pickning up. As it was available, it was sent to Holyoke Center.

Herman, he said, The Tech, could have come in and picked up many such papers and sold them to International Research.
This account seems plausible, if only because few people selling their papers would leave their names on the first page.

One paper may not be a representative sample of those available, and presumably custom-written papers are much better. Even so, given the high prices and uncertain quality of the term paper companies' work, it is not surprising that - ethics aside - the vast majority of students decide to write their own papers. The term paper market is booming - in fact, termpapers Unlimited has of-cfices here and in Rutherford, N.J., and is planning to go nationwide; but despite the growth of the industry, it still seems that most people for years to come will rush to finish their term papers at the last minute without professional help.

Harvard Tutorial in Government.

JURSris the wisest because he knows that his wisdom is in
worth nothing'' - a complete misinterpretation of Sci-
ence's basic idea.

COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY GRADUATE SCHOOL OF BUSINESS will have a representative on campus November 12 to speak with students interested in its programs. Students of all disciplines are encouraged to make appointments through the placement office.

The paper turned out to have turned out to have been originally written for a tutorial in Government at spring. The Harvard grader's comments - which Herman
said were not shown - were
almost exactly the same. When the
author of the paper was con-
tacted, he was amazed to learn
that his paper had ended up in
International's files. The paper
had been a "rush job," and he
had not considered it worth pick-
ning up. As it was available, it was sent to Holyoke Center.

Herman, he said, The Tech,
could have come in and picked
up many such papers and sold
them to International Research.
This account seems plausible, if
only because few people selling
their papers would leave their
names on the first page.

One paper may not be a representative sample of those
available, and presumably cus-
tom-written papers are much
better. Even so, given the high
prices and uncertain quality of
the term paper companies' work,