MIT costs above average

A recently-released factbook compiled by the New England Board of Higher Education revealed that MIT’s $2,675 tuition is well above the minimum private universities (about $250). MIT’s reported annual average room and board charge of $1,500 is also higher than the median university average of about $1,350.

A table of “tuition and fee” charges for 1971-72 showed that for private institutions the widest range of costs exists for “four-year” colleges, whereas a low of $405 is set for the most expensive private institution in New England in Bennington College. Vermont; its tuition charge is $385 for a liberal arts program.

The same table showed a range of $1,255 in tuition charges for private universities (defined as “any institution offering the doctorate and/or offering the professional degrees”); a high of $2,950. Room and board charges ranged from $1,100 to $2,148.

The factbook, a compilation of data from the institutional constitutions themselves, shows that 52.9% of the total undergraduate and graduate students enrolled in New England institutions and five students not attending classes at institutions in Massachusetts; this amounts to a total of $229,200 and a total of 558,723. Connecticut has the next largest student population, with 22,6% and 126,607 students. The other New England States have more than 10%.

A review of the compilation shows charges for tuition and room and board at Yale at $2,900 and $1,500 respectively; at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst at $4,112 for in-state and $1,128 and $1,553 at Harvard as $2,200 and $1,600; at Westminster Polytechnic Institute $2,500 and $1,100 Dartmouth College as $2,400 and $1,100; and the Widener College in Philadelphia as $3,640 (inclusive).

Cambridge reinstates rent control measures

Council: to rescind the December 29th vote, to readopt control (requiring a 30 day lapse), or the presentation of a petition that it was circulating; the Cambridge Tenants’ Organizing Committee (CTOC) which promoted MIT’s tax-exempt status and asked “How can the low be fair to both landlords and tenants”...all breaks to the right. CTOC also collected money during the meeting.

During much of the speech period, calls for a tenant vote were heard from pro-tenant groups. The crowd growled at their own side pressed for more time to speak, and it finally sought a request by Councillor Graham to bring an end to present verbosity.

Most of the opponents came from the aforementioned New Right Coalition which stated it had four proposals such as rent control.” Mayor Ackerman had attempted filibuster, and, after over two hours of largely repetitious rhetoric, the Council voted and passed an amended version. The new act called for a vote on a new act. We will provide background information on the papers are also.
