The MIT White Water Club will sponsor an open house at the Old West Church, 131 Cambridge St., on Saturday, February 12 at 7 pm. The open house will be held in MIT's Alumni Pool, taken for a spin by a student. In other words, in which beavers are required to paddle themselves. Any student who can swim and has at least one and a half hours to spend will be able to participate.

President Johnson, of the MIT White Water Club, states: "The open house is an opportunity for the student to see the thrill of the sport of water tubing. The experience is an unforgettable one, and will surely make you want to return for more.

The open house begins at 7 pm, and will include a demonstration of the sport, followed by a chance to try it out for yourself. The MIT White Water Club will be on hand to provide all the necessary equipment, including the boats, life jackets, and instructions.

The open house is free of charge, and is open to all students. So come out and see the thrill of water tubing at the Old West Church, 131 Cambridge St., Saturday, February 12.

The MIT White Water Club appreciates your attendance, and looks forward to seeing you at the open house.

[Signature]
President Johnson
MIT White Water Club