Peter Brook's production of King Lear recently completed its run at the Kenmore Square Cinema. And now the same theater is showing another example of the current cinematic propensity for over-produced Shakespeare: Roman Polanski'sversion of Macbeth.

It should be stated at the outset that there is nothing to recommend the film over other productions of Shakespeare, or even in general for that matter. The active is a bit of a stretch on even the most lenient interpretation of the text. But the result is a film that is both magnificently produced and magnificently mediocre.
