Dellums addresses faculty

(Continued from front page) for today, it might be misunderstood by outside institutions. An amendment was offered to refer consideration of the impeachment motion to a vote. Those voting in favor of the motion to impeach would be required to sign a petition and present it to the President. The President would then schedule a special meeting. Those voting in favor of the motion to bring impeachment proceedings would be required to sign a petition and present it to the President. The President would then schedule a special meeting.

Another point was made that it would be wrong, under any circumstances, to keep the incomplete agenda on record of the meeting. Those voting in favor of the resolution that the meeting be adjourned for the day were required to sign a petition and present it to the President. The President would then schedule a special meeting.

The final resolution, as passed in its final form, read:

The teaching faculty should make arrangements to provide students who wish to complete academic requirements (including classes, papers, quizzes, papers, and final examinations) after Thursday, May 11, 1972, will be discharged as in paragraphs 4 and 5.

These students should be given a grace period to be on campus with the faculty of MIT, and the students who have signed the petition for immediate withdrawal from the course should not be barred from returning to the college.

Ron Dellums

At this point, some aspects of the meeting were interrupted by a demonstration from California Ron Dellums. Dellums had been scheduled to speak at 4:00 PM on Thursday, but his talk was moved to today because of the meeting. The demonstration was supported by the faculty of MIT.

The situation turned to one of chaos when the police arrived. Approximately 100 people were occupying the main administration building.

During this initial stage of the occupation, the building was barricaded off by campus patrol, while approximately 100 people were occupying the main administration building.

In the office, the demonstrators barricaded the doors to prevent entrance by administrative personnel and to provide access to the faculty.

One of the demonstrations was a sit-in protest at the administration building.

Later, Assistant Special Agent of the MIT Corporation Walter L. Meehan made an announcement that the building would be vacated by the demonstrators.

The final count was 132 in favor of the resolution and 170 against it. A majority vote was about to be taken, but it was noted that a two-thirds vote would be necessary, since it is a joint committee of students and faculty members.

The motion was considered and voted on. The final vote was 181 yes, 170 no. A majority vote was about to be taken, but it was noted that a two-thirds vote would be necessary, since it is a joint committee of students and faculty members.

At this time, about 5 PM on Wednesday, the meeting was interrupted by a demonstration from California Ron Dellums. Dellums had been scheduled to speak at 4:00 PM on Thursday, but his talk was moved to today because of the meeting. The demonstration was supported by the faculty of MIT.

The situation turned to one of chaos when the police arrived. Approximately 100 people were occupying the main administration building.

During this initial stage of the occupation, the building was barricaded off by campus patrol, while approximately 100 people were occupying the main administration building.

In the office, the demonstrators barricaded the doors to prevent entrance by administrative personnel and to provide access to the faculty.

One of the demonstrations was a sit-in protest at the administration building.

Later, Assistant Special Agent of the MIT Corporation Walter L. Meehan made an announcement that the building would be vacated by the demonstrators.

The final count was 132 in favor of the resolution and 170 against it. A majority vote was about to be taken, but it was noted that a two-thirds vote would be necessary, since it is a joint committee of students and faculty members.

At this time, about 5 PM on Wednesday, the meeting was interrupted by a demonstration from California Ron Dellums. Dellums had been scheduled to speak at 4:00 PM on Thursday, but his talk was moved to today because of the meeting. The demonstration was supported by the faculty of MIT.

The situation turned to one of chaos when the police arrived. Approximately 100 people were occupying the main administration building.

During this initial stage of the occupation, the building was barricaded off by campus patrol, while approximately 100 people were occupying the main administration building.

In the office, the demonstrators barricaded the doors to prevent entrance by administrative personnel and to provide access to the faculty.

One of the demonstrations was a sit-in protest at the administration building.

Later, Assistant Special Agent of the MIT Corporation Walter L. Meehan made an announcement that the building would be vacated by the demonstrators.

The final count was 132 in favor of the resolution and 170 against it. A majority vote was about to be taken, but it was noted that a two-thirds vote would be necessary, since it is a joint committee of students and faculty members.

At this time, about 5 PM on Wednesday, the meeting was interrupted by a demonstration from California Ron Dellums. Dellums had been scheduled to speak at 4:00 PM on Thursday, but his talk was moved to today because of the meeting. The demonstration was supported by the faculty of MIT.

The situation turned to one of chaos when the police arrived. Approximately 100 people were occupying the main administration building.

During this initial stage of the occupation, the building was barricaded off by campus patrol, while approximately 100 people were occupying the main administration building.

In the office, the demonstrators barricaded the doors to prevent entrance by administrative personnel and to provide access to the faculty.

One of the demonstrations was a sit-in protest at the administration building.

Later, Assistant Special Agent of the MIT Corporation Walter L. Meehan made an announcement that the building would be vacated by the demonstrators.

The final count was 132 in favor of the resolution and 170 against it. A majority vote was about to be taken, but it was noted that a two-thirds vote would be necessary, since it is a joint committee of students and faculty members.

At this time, about 5 PM on Wednesday, the meeting was interrupted by a demonstration from California Ron Dellums. Dellums had been scheduled to speak at 4:00 PM on Thursday, but his talk was moved to today because of the meeting. The demonstration was supported by the faculty of MIT.

The situation turned to one of chaos when the police arrived. Approximately 100 people were occupying the main administration building.

During this initial stage of the occupation, the building was barricaded off by campus patrol, while approximately 100 people were occupying the main administration building.

In the office, the demonstrators barricaded the doors to prevent entrance by administrative personnel and to provide access to the faculty.

One of the demonstrations was a sit-in protest at the administration building.

Later, Assistant Special Agent of the MIT Corporation Walter L. Meehan made an announcement that the building would be vacated by the demonstrators.

The final count was 132 in favor of the resolution and 170 against it. A majority vote was about to be taken, but it was noted that a two-thirds vote would be necessary, since it is a joint committee of students and faculty members.

At this time, about 5 PM on Wednesday, the meeting was interrupted by a demonstration from California Ron Dellums. Dellums had been scheduled to speak at 4:00 PM on Thursday, but his talk was moved to today because of the meeting. The demonstration was supported by the faculty of MIT.

The situation turned to one of chaos when the police arrived. Approximately 100 people were occupying the main administration building.

During this initial stage of the occupation, the building was barricaded off by campus patrol, while approximately 100 people were occupying the main administration building.

In the office, the demonstrators barricaded the doors to prevent entrance by administrative personnel and to provide access to the faculty.

One of the demonstrations was a sit-in protest at the administration building.

Later, Assistant Special Agent of the MIT Corporation Walter L. Meehan made an announcement that the building would be vacated by the demonstrators.

The final count was 132 in favor of the resolution and 170 against it. A majority vote was about to be taken, but it was noted that a two-thirds vote would be necessary, since it is a joint committee of students and faculty members.

At this time, about 5 PM on Wednesday, the meeting was interrupted by a demonstration from California Ron Dellums. Dellums had been scheduled to speak at 4:00 PM on Thursday, but his talk was moved to today because of the meeting. The demonstration was supported by the faculty of MIT.

The situation turned to one of chaos when the police arrived. Approximately 100 people were occupying the main administration building.

During this initial stage of the occupation, the building was barricaded off by campus patrol, while approximately 100 people were occupying the main administration building.

In the office, the demonstrators barricaded the doors to prevent entrance by administrative personnel and to provide access to the faculty.

One of the demonstrations was a sit-in protest at the administration building.

Later, Assistant Special Agent of the MIT Corporation Walter L. Meehan made an announcement that the building would be vacated by the demonstrators.

The final count was 132 in favor of the resolution and 170 against it. A majority vote was about to be taken, but it was noted that a two-thirds vote would be necessary, since it is a joint committee of students and faculty members.

At this time, about 5 PM on Wednesday, the meeting was interrupted by a demonstration from California Ron Dellums. Dellums had been scheduled to speak at 4:00 PM on Thursday, but his talk was moved to today because of the meeting. The demonstration was supported by the faculty of MIT.

The situation turned to one of chaos when the police arrived. Approximately 100 people were occupying the main administration building.

During this initial stage of the occupation, the building was barricaded off by campus patrol, while approximately 100 people were occupying the main administration building.

In the office, the demonstrators barricaded the doors to prevent entrance by administrative personnel and to provide access to the faculty.

One of the demonstrations was a sit-in protest at the administration building.

Later, Assistant Special Agent of the MIT Corporation Walter L. Meehan made an announcement that the building would be vacated by the demonstrators.

The final count was 132 in favor of the resolution and 170 against it. A majority vote was about to be taken, but it was noted that a two-thirds vote would be necessary, since it is a joint committee of students and faculty members.

At this time, about 5 PM on Wednesday, the meeting was interrupted by a demonstration from California Ron Dellums. Dellums had been scheduled to speak at 4:00 PM on Thursday, but his talk was moved to today because of the meeting. The demonstration was supported by the faculty of MIT.

The situation turned to one of chaos when the police arrived. Approximately 100 people were occupying the main administration building.

During this initial stage of the occupation, the building was barricaded off by campus patrol, while approximately 100 people were occupying the main administration building.

In the office, the demonstrators barricaded the doors to prevent entrance by administrative personnel and to provide access to the faculty.

One of the demonstrations was a sit-in protest at the administration building.

Later, Assistant Special Agent of the MIT Corporation Walter L. Meehan made an announcement that the building would be vacated by the demonstrators.

The final count was 132 in favor of the resolution and 170 against it. A majority vote was about to be taken, but it was noted that a two-thirds vote would be necessary, since it is a joint committee of students and faculty members.