Mermelstein questions penalties

At one point during the hearing Mermelstein asked, "If occurrence things at MIT, is the way?" Assistant to the Vice-President of Student Affairs, Rees, said that there is an "evidence coming up with a choice in it, that's one side and to see what people bodies here involved that can be talked to to convince them.""Doming was called to testify that Mermelstein had called for "irresponsible action. He said that he had not had any personal physical or verbal encounters with Mermelstein.

For his defense, Mermelstein called one witness, Ron Siegel. He told Siegel that Colburn had bloomed his way when he tried to enter the ROTC building and that after the announcements were made. Siegel said that he had gone to Colburn and asked him if they were not allowed to leave. Siegel said "No, you can leave, but he can't," pointing to Mermelstein.

When asked by Wadsworth if he had wanted to leave, Mermelstein replied that he had wanted to go and tell those who were outside what was happening inside and to see what was going on. Mermelstein then tried to show that the action taken during the occupation by the occupiers was done in a democratic manner. He said, anyone who wanted to leave the occupation could, and that the people made a decision that was being made there.
