The Council for the Arts at MIT has three principle objectives:

1. To study the role and importance of the arts in education;
2. To promote the identification and obtaining financial support for activities in the arts;
3. To act as spokesman for the arts at MIT.

Financial Support

The Council's assistance is urgently needed to help MIT to maintain its current high level of financial support for the arts and gifts of money to enhance the environment. MIT will always need this support, not because it is not already contributing to national problems but because it is, and it must also provide the incentive for our government and private foundations to continue to support and encourage the arts. The arts are a major component of the national economy and have traditionally been a major source of inspiration and creativity. The arts have a unique ability to transcend the boundaries of time and place and to create a sense of unity and purpose.

Paul Thisman

For recommendations regarding the physical environment of the arts, a number of important points must be considered:

1. The first relates to the MIT student, who, like the adult at home, will be concerned with the arts and the environment. MIT has long been a leader in the development of a need to bring art and science together, and the Corporation is now keenly interested in exploring ways to involve students in the arts. I have been informed that certain shortsighted individuals believe that the arts are not a part of the student experience at MIT. This is not true, and it is imperative that the Corporation recognize and support the arts as an integral part of the student experience.

2. The second reason, stemming from the first, is that the arts are an important aspect of the educational process. The arts provide a unique opportunity for students to explore and develop their creative abilities.

3. The third reason, stemming from the first two, is that the arts are an important aspect of the Corporation's role in the community. The Corporation has a responsibility to provide a comprehensive educational environment for its students, and the arts play a critical role in this.

4. The fourth reason, stemming from the first three, is that the arts are an important aspect of the Corporation's role in the world. The arts have the power to bring people together and to promote understanding and goodwill.

5. The fifth reason, stemming from the first four, is that the arts are an important aspect of the Corporation's role in the future. The arts are a vital part of the human experience and will continue to be so in the years to come.

The Corporation for the Arts at MIT has, from its beginning, been an integral part of the educational environment at MIT. It has provided a forum for the expression of ideas and for the exploration of new concepts. The Corporation has also provided a means for the arts to be integrated into the educational experience of students. It has supported a wide range of activities, from performances and exhibitions to research and scholarship. The Corporation has also provided a means for students to engage with the arts in a meaningful way.
