McGovern campaign: riding the surge

By Beth Moore

Recently, at a meeting of the house committee government of McCormick Hall, the subject of McCormick becoming an officially co-ed dormitory was brought up. After much procrastination, the discussion was tabled, the discussion was due to a depth of the protection of feminine virtue, whatever as all we know that are numerous men residing in its hallowed halls.

The question at hand is whether or not the merits of McCormick becoming co-ed outweigh the preferable option of being protected from the tractor opposition. A survey taken of residents indicates that approximately one third of McCormick residents are opposed to McCormick becoming co-ed.

The question is whether or not the merits of McCormick becoming co-ed outweigh the preferable option of being protected from the tractor opposition. A survey taken of residents indicates that approximately one third of McCormick residents are opposed to McCormick becoming co-ed.

By Peter Pocock

WASHINGTON, OCTOBER 18 (In October 1971, Peter Pocock was drafted one of the prominent legal minds. Pocock, George S. McGovern (D.S.D.) to the demands of the Peace Corps last July. In January 1972, less than one week after Senator Edward M. Salkie (D-Me.) announced he would contest the Peace Corps, our Washington correspondent, who was one of the campaign trail with Mark Astolfi '73; Managing Editor

McGovern's campaign is riding the surge

By Beth Moore

Recently, at a meeting of the house committee government of McCormick Hall, the subject of McCormick becoming an officially co-ed dormitory was brought up. After much procrastination, the discussion was tabled, the discussion was due to a depth of the protection of feminine virtue, whatever as all we know that are numerous men residing in its hallowed halls.

The question at hand is whether or not the merits of McCormick becoming co-ed outweigh the preferable option of being protected from the tractor opposition. A survey taken of residents indicates that approximately one third of McCormick residents are opposed to McCormick becoming co-ed.

By Beth Moore

Recently, at a meeting of the house committee government of McCormick Hall, the subject of McCormick becoming an officially co-ed dormitory was brought up. After much procrastination, the discussion was tabled, the discussion was due to a depth of the protection of feminine virtue, whatever as all we know that are numerous men residing in its hallowed halls.

The question at hand is whether or not the merits of McCormick becoming co-ed outweigh the preferable option of being protected from the tractor opposition. A survey taken of residents indicates that approximately one third of McCormick residents are opposed to McCormick becoming co-ed.

By Beth Moore

Recently, at a meeting of the house committee government of McCormick Hall, the subject of McCormick becoming an officially co-ed dormitory was brought up. After much procrastination, the discussion was tabled, the discussion was due to a depth of the protection of feminine virtue, whatever as all we know that are numerous men residing in its hallowed halls.

The question at hand is whether or not the merits of McCormick becoming co-ed outweigh the preferable option of being protected from the tractor opposition. A survey taken of residents indicates that approximately one third of McCormick residents are opposed to McCormick becoming co-ed.

By Beth Moore

Recently, at a meeting of the house committee government of McCormick Hall, the subject of McCormick becoming an officially co-ed dormitory was brought up. After much procrastination, the discussion was tabled, the discussion was due to a depth of the protection of feminine virtue, whatever as all we know that are numerous men residing in its hallowed halls.

The question at hand is whether or not the merits of McCormick becoming co-ed outweigh the preferable option of being protected from the tractor opposition. A survey taken of residents indicates that approximately one third of McCormick residents are opposed to McCormick becoming co-ed.

By Beth Moore

Recently, at a meeting of the house committee government of McCormick Hall, the subject of McCormick becoming an officially co-ed dormitory was brought up. After much procrastination, the discussion was tabled, the discussion was due to a depth of the protection of feminine virtue, whatever as all we know that are numerous men residing in its hallowed halls.

The question at hand is whether or not the merits of McCormick becoming co-ed outweigh the preferable option of being protected from the tractor opposition. A survey taken of residents indicates that approximately one third of McCormick residents are opposed to McCormick becoming co-ed.

By Beth Moore

Recently, at a meeting of the house committee government of McCormick Hall, the subject of McCormick becoming an officially co-ed dormitory was brought up. After much procrastination, the discussion was tabled, the discussion was due to a depth of the protection of feminine virtue, whatever as all we know that are numerous men residing in its hallowed halls.

The question at hand is whether or not the merits of McCormick becoming co-ed outweigh the preferable option of being protected from the tractor opposition. A survey taken of residents indicates that approximately one third of McCormick residents are opposed to McCormick becoming co-ed.

By Beth Moore

Recently, at a meeting of the house committee government of McCormick Hall, the subject of McCormick becoming an officially co-ed dormitory was brought up. After much procrastination, the discussion was tabled, the discussion was due to a depth of the protection of feminine virtue, whatever as all we know that are numerous men residing in its hallowed halls.

The question at hand is whether or not the merits of McCormick becoming co-ed outweigh the preferable option of being protected from the tractor opposition. A survey taken of residents indicates that approximately one third of McCormick residents are opposed to McCormick becoming co-ed.

By Beth Moore

Recently, at a meeting of the house committee government of McCormick Hall, the subject of McCormick becoming an officially co-ed dormitory was brought up. After much procrastination, the discussion was tabled, the discussion was due to a depth of the protection of feminine virtue, whatever as all we know that are numerous men residing in its hallowed halls.

The question at hand is whether or not the merits of McCormick becoming co-ed outweigh the preferable option of being protected from the tractor opposition. A survey taken of residents indicates that approximately one third of McCormick residents are opposed to McCormick becoming co-ed.