After what were nothing short of a marvelous two sets by Tir Na Nog and Steeley Span, Procol Harum proved to be anti-climactic. Having seen Gary Brooker and friends play three previous times, chronologically in the settings of warm-up for Mountain at the Music Hall, following the revised, tightly-bootlegged and the Black Dog. Nothing more than remarkably musical skill and dexterity impressed that young audience; perhaps, though, the incredulous high point was their encore, a fast-fingered cover of Frankie Valli and the Four Seasons’ “Big Q.” After that little more could be said or done than stand and cheer Steeley Span.

Steeley Span

Techno-night was nothing short of a marvelous two sets by Tir Na Nog and Steeley Span, Procol Harum proved to be anti-climactic. Having seen Gary Brooker and friends play three previous times, chronologically in the settings of warm-up for Mountain at the Music Hall, following the revised, tightly-bootlegged and the Black Dog. Nothing more than remarkably musical skill and dexterity impressed that young audience; perhaps, though, the incredulous high point was their encore, a fast-fingered cover of Frankie Valli and the Four Seasons’ “Big Q.” After that little more could be said or done than stand and cheer Steeley Span.

After what were nothing short of a marvelous two sets by Tir Na Nog and Steeley Span, Procol Harum proved to be anti-climactic. Having seen Gary Brooker and friends play three previous times, chronologically in the settings of warm-up for Mountain at the Music Hall, following the revised, tightly-bootlegged and the Black Dog. Nothing more than remarkably musical skill and dexterity impressed that young audience; perhaps, though, the incredulous high point was their encore, a fast-fingered cover of Frankie Valli and the Four Seasons’ “Big Q.” After that little more could be said or done than stand and cheer Steeley Span.

Steeley Span

After what were nothing short of a marvelous two sets by Tir Na Nog and Steeley Span, Procol Harum proved to be anti-climactic. Having seen Gary Brooker and friends play three previous times, chronologically in the settings of warm-up for Mountain at the Music Hall, following the revised, tightly-bootlegged and the Black Dog. Nothing more than remarkably musical skill and dexterity impressed that young audience; perhaps, though, the incredulous high point was their encore, a fast-fingered cover of Frankie Valli and the Four Seasons’ “Big Q.” After that little more could be said or done than stand and cheer Steeley Span.

Steeley Span

After what were nothing short of a marvelous two sets by Tir Na Nog and Steeley Span, Procol Harum proved to be anti-climactic. Having seen Gary Brooker and friends play three previous times, chronologically in the settings of warm-up for Mountain at the Music Hall, following the revised, tightly-bootlegged and the Black Dog. Nothing more than remarkably musical skill and dexterity impressed that young audience; perhaps, though, the incredulous high point was their encore, a fast-fingered cover of Frankie Valli and the Four Seasons’ “Big Q.” After that little more could be said or done than stand and cheer Steeley Span.