Group offers jobs in legal agencies

By Charlotte Cooper

The MIT Urban Legal Studies Program (ULSP) will offer full-time law-related positions with organizations and public agencies in the Boston area to 25 students this summer.

In the Project's previous two summers, students have served as legislative assistants in the Massachusetts House of Representatives, staffed task forces at the Boston University Center for Law and Health Sciences, and developed a new court for the City of Boston. This year, positions will also be available in criminal justice, housing problems, and women's rights. Students will be involved in administrative agencies, community organizing, legislative activity, or research. Interested students can obtain further information about the positions from the ULSP office, located in the Mezzanine Lounge of Student Center.

Welcome to the Pre-Pro甚至ional Advising and Career Services Office (PPASO), the focal point of all pre med and pre health students.

The investigation of feasible alternatives is being conducted from two different approaches. First, by remaining in their current training system, the competitors are examining their goals from the perspectives of useful dining services. The second manner of analysis involves the pricing of each individual option and the plan's impact on the rest of the training system.

H. Eugene Beamer, Director of Housing and Food Services, revealed these three options are presently being considered. A possible lunch plan would consist of soup, a sandwich, a limited salad bar, desserts, and beverages. They are also comparing two dinner alternatives: a fast service menu with one specialty item, and a dinner featuring one or two courses with a limited salad that might be prepared elsewhere and transported to Ashdown.

The Administration will review the various proposals in order to determine as optimally efficient meal plan from the standpoint of expenses and appeal. Upon making such a selection, the Housing and Food Services intends to meet with the Committee on Student Environment and recommend a dining plan if sufficient funding can be located. At that time, the committee will recommend a plan to the Administration. The Administration will direct its efforts towards an attempt to implement a limited dining facility.

The Ashdown Dining Hall will remain closed while deliberations continue. It is presently being renovated for future use.
