Six months ago Alex Makowski sold me "Ring Backs." With our usual promptness, Alex sent back his royalty check, but I didn't know, this time, why. Or, as Alex put it, the song was revealed to him the same day he received the check.

Alex's song is one of the most promising of the dozen he released last year. It was written during his freshman year at MIT, and it was his first attempt at writing a serious composition. It tells the story of a young man who is torn between his love for a woman and his desire to be a musician. The song is a reflection of Alex's own experiences as a musician and a student, and it is a testament to his talent and passion.

Alex's song is also a reflection of the current state of the music industry. As artists struggle to make a living, they are forced to rely on their creativity and their ability to connect with their audience. Alex's song is a powerful example of how music can be used to tell a story and to inspire others.

In conclusion, Alex's song is a testament to his talent and passion as a musician. It is a powerful example of how music can be used to tell a story and to inspire others. We hope that Alex will continue to write and perform music that touches the hearts of listeners everywhere.