More thoughts on judicial process

By Paul Schudler

In the past, when students who were involved in the ROTC occupation were being tried, the message was loud and clear: the court was not interested in compromise or concessions, nor was there any room for discussion. Now that the court system is being used to try the judicial process, a different message is being conveyed. The residents of McCormick are the ones who are being tried, and the question is whether they will be found guilty or not. This is a serious concern for the residents, and it is one that must be addressed.

The Dean's Office has been trying to give the impression that it is not interested in compromise or discussion. However, this is not the case. The Dean's Office is interested in finding a solution that is acceptable to all parties. This is not an easy task, but it is one that must be accomplished if the residents are to be found not guilty.

The Dean's Office has made several attempts to reach a compromise. However, these attempts have been met with resistance. The residents are not willing to give up their rights without a fight. This is understandable, given the circumstances.

The Dean's Office has also been trying to present a fair and impartial picture of the situation. However, this is not possible. The residents are not willing to accept a fair and impartial outcome, and they are not willing to accept a compromise.

The Dean's Office has been trying to give the impression that it is not interested in compromise or discussion. However, this is not the case. The Dean's Office is interested in finding a solution that is acceptable to all parties. This is not an easy task, but it is one that must be accomplished if the residents are to be found not guilty.

The Dean's Office has made several attempts to reach a compromise. However, these attempts have been met with resistance. The residents are not willing to give up their rights without a fight. This is understandable, given the circumstances.

The Dean's Office has also been trying to present a fair and impartial picture of the situation. However, this is not possible. The residents are not willing to accept a fair and impartial outcome, and they are not willing to accept a compromise.

The Dean's Office has been trying to give the impression that it is not interested in compromise or discussion. However, this is not the case. The Dean's Office is interested in finding a solution that is acceptable to all parties. This is not an easy task, but it is one that must be accomplished if the residents are to be found not guilty.

The Dean's Office has made several attempts to reach a compromise. However, these attempts have been met with resistance. The residents are not willing to give up their rights without a fight. This is understandable, given the circumstances.

The Dean's Office has also been trying to present a fair and impartial picture of the situation. However, this is not possible. The residents are not willing to accept a fair and impartial outcome, and they are not willing to accept a compromise.