Black weekend: seminar and concert

(Continued from page 1) All the workshops are being held in the Student Center.

Dean Hope noted that once initial student reaction was resumed, she would like to see more of the influence of the "Black "73, who had originally approached her with the idea, begin to get things moving. Hope has only been at MIT for six months, but with the added assistance of Robert Weatherall and the Placement Office, John Mims from the Admission Office, and the then untapped energies of Professor W.E.B. Harris, of University of Virginia, students will enjoy themselves.

Hope pointed out that alumni response had been wonderful. "We are unable to supply the participants with transportation, housing, or food, but more are expected today.

Not only will the conference feature food for the brain, but there will be a special 'you food lunch.' The lunch will be held in the Sala de Puerto Rico and includes preparation. Hope said that all MIT administrators, faculty, and staff were invited to participate in all events.

Mandil

The conference will only be one of a series of events to be sponsored by the Black community this weekend. On Friday evening, in addition to WTBTS announces "Mandil is coming." The Chetna, WTBTS' alternative to soul programming in the Boston area, will present the group in a program to be held within the Student Center.

Mandil and its super-rock, super-soul sound will be proced by local talent and the antics of the Chetna jocks. Tickets are now on sale and available at the Graduate Student Council Office (35-100) or in the lobby of Building 10. Tickets may also be purchased at Skippy White's Records and any of the Nubian Notion Shops.

Also featured this weekend is the MIT Black Christian Fellowship Choir. On Sunday, April 9, the Choir will provide service in the MIT Chapel with the Reverend Bobby Sasser at 6:30 pm.

Although there have been reports it as a Black Weekend, this fact has not been established. Three groups planned different events that accidentally fall on the same weekend. It may not have been originally set up that way, but more are expected today.

Competition planned for undergrad writing

By Curtis Reeves

The Humanities Department, for the second straight year, will present prizes for outstanding writing by MIT undergraduates.

Three different awards will be given, including one especially for freshmen. A total of $75 will be presented for winners.

The Ellen King Prize is for freshwater writing in all categories. In the only essay was eligible for this prize, but poetry and prose prizes were also being awarded this year in response to the growing interest in these categories.

All undergraduates may enter the competition for the Robert A. Bolt Prizes. The first of these is a general prize for works in all categories, the second is for compositions of substantial that's where it's headed.

entrants must be delivered to the room noted above by 5 pm Friday, April 20. After the prizes are awarded, all writings will be returned.

Exchange offers variety

By Ken Davis

MIT provides many ways for students, both graduate and undergraduates, to get a broader educational experience than would normally be possible from the scope of Institute courses. One of these programs is cross-registration with Harvard University.

Although less publicized than the Wellesley exchange, MIT and Harvard have allowed graduate students to take courses at each other since 1971. The undergraduate aspect of the program has been in existence for some-

The three programs are: the Wellesley exchange, which requires permission of the Dean of the subject involved. Traditionally permission has been obtained from all but the schools of business, law and medicine.

A vast majority of the MIT undergraduates involved in the program take humanities courses. Although some are enrolled in literature, history and philosophy, foreign languages are the most popular. Of the language courses, Russian predominates.

Harvard is sending 272 students to MIT this term. They number among them 25 undergraduates. The most frequently requested department over the last several years has been urban studies, followed by political science, architecture and management. Surprisingly, few Harvard students were enrolled in science courses.

For an MIT or Harvard student to cross-register at the other school, several conditions must be met. The student must take a course which is not offered at his school, preferably one in his course of study which is more advanced than what he could take outside of the program. Students must get permission of the course's instructor. In addition, MIT undergraduates who want to take graduate-level courses at Harvard must get the approval of their undergraduate advisor and one in his course of study.

One of these programs is cross-

registration with Harvard University.

Although less publicized than the Wellesley exchange, MIT and Harvard have allowed graduate students to take courses at each other since 1971. The undergraduate aspect of the program has been in existence for somewhat less than 15 years.

Now, there are 266 MIT students registered in courses at Harvard. Approximately 30 of these are undergraduates. All the undergraduates are, of course, because of limitations placed by MIT, freshmen or seniors who have come of 4.0 or better.

Women's sportswear, were $4.35 to $7.25 .......... 1.00 to 8.99

Women's sweaters, were $5.45 to $13.45 ........... 1.00 to 9.99

Men's sweaters, were $10.95 to $16.95 .............. 5.00 to 10.00

Dress & Sport shirts, were $6-$12 ..................... 1.99 to 7.99

Men's sweaters, were $10-$15 ............................. NOW 5.00

Men's jackets, were $25-$35 ............................. NOW 3.99

Men's shoes, were $19-$35 .............................. NOW 7.99

Dress shoes, were $25-$40 .............................. NOW 10.99

Women's shoes, were $12-$35......................... NOW 10.99

MIT student center

 Dig Israel on your next vacation 30 conferences

With a shovel. At an archeological site. On a new EL AL College Vacation. There is more in Israel that's exciting, surprising and profoundly moving than you can begin to imagine.

You'll dig sunny, swinging, fascinating Israel.

You can renew yourself and wear yourself out.

Fly to Israel for $381* (from New York) and $470* (from Los Angeles) and on the way home we'll give you one European stop-over free.

Add $57* during June,

July and August departures.

See 4 seas. Tan at Learn. Enjoy.

Pregnant??

WE CAN HELP.

CALL 787-4400

served in science courses.

For an MIT or Harvard student to cross-register at the other school, several conditions must be met. The student must take a course which is not offered at his school, preferably one in his course of study which is more advanced than what he could take outside of the program. Students must get permission of the course's instructor. In addition, MIT undergraduates who want to take graduate-level courses at Harvard must get the approval of their undergraduate advisor and one in his course of study.

Seven different awards will be given, including one especially for freshmen, a total of $75 will be presented for winners.

The Ellen King Prize is for freshwater writing in all categories. All the only essay was eligible for this prize, but poetry and prose prizes were also being allowed this year in response to the growing interest in these categories.

All undergraduates may enter the competition for the Robert A. Bolt Prizes. The first of these is in a general prize for works in all categories, the second is for compositions of substantial that's where it's headed. The latter should give definite evidence of being of publishable quality, and will be judged by a publishing house editor, or by an established with or without the permission of the Dean of the subject involved. Traditionally permission has been obtained from all but the schools of business, law and medicine.

A vast majority of the MIT undergraduates involved in the program take humanities courses. Although some are enrolled in literature, history and philosophy, foreign languages are the most popular. Of the language courses, Russian predominates.

Harvard is sending 272 students to MIT this term. They number among them 25 undergraduates. The most frequently requested department over the last several years has been urban studies, followed by political science, architecture and management. Surprisingly, few Harvard students were enrolled in science courses.

For an MIT or Harvard student to cross-register at the other school, several conditions must be met. The student must take a course which is not offered at his school, preferably one in his course of study which is more advanced than what he could take outside of the program. Students must get permission of the course's instructor. In addition, MIT undergraduates who want to take graduate-level courses at Harvard must get the approval of their undergraduate advisor and one in his course of study.

Seven different awards will be given, including one especially for freshmen, a total of $75 will be presented for winners.

The Ellen King Prize is for freshwater writing in all categories. All the only essay was eligible for this prize, but poetry and prose prizes were also being allowed this year in response to the growing interest in these categories.

All undergraduates may enter the competition for the Robert A. Bolt Prizes. The first of these is in a general prize for works in all categories, the second is for compositions of substantial that's where it's headed. The latter should give definite evidence of being of publishable quality, and will be judged by a publishing house editor, or by an established with or without the permission of the Dean of the subject involved. Traditionally permission has been obtained from all but the schools of business, law and medicine.

A vast majority of the MIT undergraduates involved in the program take humanities courses. Although some are enrolled in literature, history and philosophy, foreign languages are the most popular. Of the language courses, Russian predominates.

Harvard is sending 272 students to MIT this term. They number among them 25 undergraduates. The most frequently requested department over the last several years has been urban studies, followed by political science, architecture and management. Surprisingly, few Harvard students were enrolled in science courses.

For an MIT or Harvard student to cross-register at the other school, several conditions must be met. The student must take a course which is not offered at his school, preferably one in his course of study which is more advanced than what he could take outside of the program. Students must get permission of the course's instructor. In addition, MIT undergraduates who want to take graduate-level courses at Harvard must get the approval of their undergraduate advisor and one in his course of study.

Seven different awards will be given, including one especially for freshmen, a total of $75 will be presented for winners.

The Ellen King Prize is for freshwater writing in all categories. All the only essay was eligible for this prize, but poetry and prose prizes were also being allowed this year in response to the growing interest in these categories.

All undergraduates may enter the competition for the Robert A. Bolt Prizes. The first of these is a general prize for works in all categories, the second is for compositions of substantial that's where it's headed. The latter should give definite evidence of being of publishable quality, and will be judged by a publishing house editor, or by an established with or without the permission of the Dean of the subject involved. Traditionally permission has been obtained from all but the schools of business, law and medicine.