By Curtis Reeves

Plans for the John F. Kennedy Memorial Library have been revealed in Boston amid speculation that the project will be funded by federal monies. The site of Cambridge, where the library is to be built.

The project, involving renovation of existing buildings and skyscraper-like structures, will cost $29 million. The library will have an exhibition area and the addition of fast-food restaurants on the lab.

The library, which will include the Fletcher Center for Security Studies, has been designed to be located at the corner of Massachusetts Avenue and Boylston Street. The twenty-story building is now being constructed and is expected to be completed by the end of next year.

Richardson expressed regret that the building could not be totally independent of East Campus, but the extent to which the new library will be able to accommodate the library is yet to be determined.

Housing and class size

This year, the number of students admitted was cut in hopes of reducing class size. About 875 students, who were admitted, will have at least their own assigned room, according to Director of Housing Cormrick.

The Office of the Dean for Student Affairs originated the proposal of last year's freshman class, which was about 50 larger than had been expected.

Browning stated that their opinion was that last year's freshman class was about 875 and that the slightly larger class will probably force some overcrowding.

Another drawback of this lack of space is that last year's sophomore class was about 81%.

This year, an attempt will be made to accommodate the increased number of students, but the extent to which the new library will be able to accommodate the library is yet to be determined.

Browning stated that their opinion was that last year's freshman class was about 50 larger than had been expected, which was about 875 and that the slightly larger class will probably force some overcrowding.

The Office of the Dean for Student Affairs originated the proposal of last year's freshman class, which was about 50 larger than had been expected.

Browning stated that their opinion was that last year's freshman class was about 875 and that the slightly larger class will probably force some overcrowding.

By Paul Schillinger

Three "newspapers," a book, and a magazine, are the MIT news which launched it as "The MIT community's major news source since its founding in 1861. For many years, it was the only publication on campus that regularly reached students, except for the now-defunct humor magazine, Poindoo.

The paper has passed through many stages since its founding again as an MIT newspaper has since become a major source of information and entertainment. Published on a weekly basis, the paper has several sections, including news, features, and opinion. It is published by the Office of the Dean of Student Affairs and is distributed to both students and employees of MIT.

The paper has also had its share of challenges. As an MIT newspaper, it has faced several challenges over the years, including financial problems, staffing issues, and changes in the campus community. Despite these challenges, the paper has remained a vital part of the MIT community and continues to provide important news and information to students and employees.

Many remain in dorms

(Continued from page 1)