The Historical
OLD VILNA SHUL

16 PHILLIPS STREET, BEACON HILL, BOSTON

Inviting Everyone to Join Them for the High Holy Days

TRADITIONAL ORTHODOX SERVICES
Rosh Hashanah, Sept. 27, 28
Evening Services 6:00, Morning Services 7:30
Yom Kippur, Oct. 6
Ketubah: 3:30 Morning Service 7:00 Victim: 10:30 a.m.

NO CHARGE FOR SEATS

Headquarters
DENIM JEANS
LEVIS-LEE-WRANGLER
HIKING BOOTS
DUNHAM TYROLEANS
TURTLENECKS
JERSEYS
2.98

Central War Surplus
483 MASS. AVE
Central Square
Cambridge

By Bill Conklin

The Student Committee on Educational Policy held its first meeting of the year last Wednesday.

Matt Farber, Chairman, and Robert Sacks, Secretary and Director of Projects, resumed last year's projects and outlined the philosophy of grading, and the major departures from the usual standards of grading, the committee discussed the problem of finding enough people to carry on projects. “We need to get people to work on projects that they are particularly interested in,” said Sacks. Lack of personnel was a major problem last year. At present, the SCEP is comprised of eleven graduate and undergraduate students. “We are still in the process of finding enough people to carry on projects,” said Sacks.

Sturgeon to give LSC talk

(Continued from page 1)

Sturgeon to give LSC talk

Judith Merril said simply, “The man has style.”

None of which indicates that Sturgeon can get through a single sentence as a speaker, except that Merril’s entire article characterizes him as an engaging and complex man; thus we can hold some hope of an engaging and complex lecture.

Sturgeon was the toast of two continents as a person, without receiving an invitation to speak at MIT. The invitations to speak at MIT, the committee for this year’s projects and outlined the philosophy of grading, and the major departures from the usual standards of grading, the committee discussed the problem of finding enough people to carry on projects. “We need to get people to work on projects that they are particularly interested in,” said Sacks. Lack of personnel was a major problem last year. At present, the SCEP is comprised of eleven graduate and undergraduate students. “We are still in the process of finding enough people to carry on projects,” said Sacks.

SCEP holds first meeting

By Bill Conklin

The Student Committee on Educational Policy held its first meeting of the year last Wednesday.

Matt Farber, Chairman, and Robert Sacks, Secretary and Director of Projects, resumed last year’s projects and outlined the goals for the coming year.

The committee discussed the problem of finding enough people to carry on projects. “We need to get people to work on projects that they are particularly interested in,” said Sacks. Lack of personnel was a major problem last year. At present, the SCEP is comprised of eleven graduate and undergraduate students. “We are still in the process of finding enough people to carry on projects,” said Sacks.

Sturgeon to give LSC talk

Judith Merril said simply, “The man has style.”

None of which indicates that Sturgeon can get through a single sentence as a speaker, except that Merril’s entire article characterizes him as an engaging and complex man; thus we can hold some hope of an engaging and complex lecture.

Sturgeon was the toast of two continents as a person, without receiving an invitation to speak at MIT. The invitations to speak at MIT, the committee for this year’s projects and outlined the philosophy of grading, and the major departures from the usual standards of grading, the committee discussed the problem of finding enough people to carry on projects. “We need to get people to work on projects that they are particularly interested in,” said Sacks. Lack of personnel was a major problem last year. At present, the SCEP is comprised of eleven graduate and undergraduate students. “We are still in the process of finding enough people to carry on projects,” said Sacks.

SCEP holds first meeting

By Bill Conklin

The Student Committee on Educational Policy held its first meeting of the year last Wednesday.

Matt Farber, Chairman, and Robert Sacks, Secretary and Director of Projects, resumed last year’s projects and outlined the goals for the coming year.

The committee discussed the problem of finding enough people to carry on projects. “We need to get people to work on projects that they are particularly interested in,” said Sacks. Lack of personnel was a major problem last year. At present, the SCEP is comprised of eleven graduate and undergraduate students. “We are still in the process of finding enough people to carry on projects,” said Sacks.

Sturgeon to give LSC talk

Judith Merril said simply, “The man has style.”

None of which indicates that Sturgeon can get through a single sentence as a speaker, except that Merril’s entire article characterizes him as an engaging and complex man; thus we can hold some hope of an engaging and complex lecture.

Sturgeon was the toast of two continents as a person, without receiving an invitation to speak at MIT. The invitations to speak at MIT, the committee for this year’s projects and outlined the philosophy of grading, and the major departures from the usual standards of grading, the committee discussed the problem of finding enough people to carry on projects. “We need to get people to work on projects that they are particularly interested in,” said Sacks. Lack of personnel was a major problem last year. At present, the SCEP is comprised of eleven graduate and undergraduate students. “We are still in the process of finding enough people to carry on projects,” said Sacks.

SCEP holds first meeting

By Bill Conklin

The Student Committee on Educational Policy held its first meeting of the year last Wednesday.

Matt Farber, Chairman, and Robert Sacks, Secretary and Director of Projects, resumed last year’s projects and outlined the goals for the coming year.

The committee discussed the problem of finding enough people to carry on projects. “We need to get people to work on projects that they are particularly interested in,” said Sacks. Lack of personnel was a major problem last year. At present, the SCEP is comprised of eleven graduate and undergraduate students. “We are still in the process of finding enough people to carry on projects,” said Sacks.

Sturgeon to give LSC talk

Judith Merril said simply, “The man has style.”

None of which indicates that Sturgeon can get through a single sentence as a speaker, except that Merril’s entire article characterizes him as an engaging and complex man; thus we can hold some hope of an engaging and complex lecture.

Sturgeon was the toast of two continents as a person, without receiving an invitation to speak at MIT. The invitations to speak at MIT, the committee for this year’s projects and outlined the philosophy of grading, and the major departures from the usual standards of grading, the committee discussed the problem of finding enough people to carry on projects. “We need to get people to work on projects that they are particularly interested in,” said Sacks. Lack of personnel was a major problem last year. At present, the SCEP is comprised of eleven graduate and undergraduate students. “We are still in the process of finding enough people to carry on projects,” said Sacks.

SCEP holds first meeting

By Bill Conklin

The Student Committee on Educational Policy held its first meeting of the year last Wednesday.

Matt Farber, Chairman, and Robert Sacks, Secretary and Director of Projects, resumed last year’s projects and outlined the goals for the coming year.

The committee discussed the problem of finding enough people to carry on projects. “We need to get people to work on projects that they are particularly interested in,” said Sacks. Lack of personnel was a major problem last year. At present, the SCEP is comprised of eleven graduate and undergraduate students. “We are still in the process of finding enough people to carry on projects,” said Sacks.

Sturgeon to give LSC talk

Judith Merril said simply, “The man has style.”

None of which indicates that Sturgeon can get through a single sentence as a speaker, except that Merril’s entire article characterizes him as an engaging and complex man; thus we can hold some hope of an engaging and complex lecture.

Sturgeon was the toast of two continents as a person, without receiving an invitation to speak at MIT. The invitations to speak at MIT, the committee for this year’s projects and outlined the philosophy of grading, and the major departures from the usual standards of grading, the committee discussed the problem of finding enough people to carry on projects. “We need to get people to work on projects that they are particularly interested in,” said Sacks. Lack of personnel was a major problem last year. At present, the SCEP is comprised of eleven graduate and undergraduate students. “We are still in the process of finding enough people to carry on projects,” said Sacks.

SCEP holds first meeting

By Bill Conklin

The Student Committee on Educational Policy held its first meeting of the year last Wednesday.

Matt Farber, Chairman, and Robert Sacks, Secretary and Director of Projects, resumed last year’s projects and outlined the goals for the coming year.

The committee discussed the problem of finding enough people to carry on projects. “We need to get people to work on projects that they are particularly interested in,” said Sacks. Lack of personnel was a major problem last year. At present, the SCEP is comprised of eleven graduate and undergraduate students. “We are still in the process of finding enough people to carry on projects,” said Sacks.

Sturgeon to give LSC talk

Judith Merril said simply, “The man has style.”

None of which indicates that Sturgeon can get through a single sentence as a speaker, except that Merril’s entire article characterizes him as an engaging and complex man; thus we can hold some hope of an engaging and complex lecture.

Sturgeon was the toast of two continents as a person, without receiving an invitation to speak at MIT. The invitations to speak at MIT, the committee for this year’s projects and outlined the philosophy of grading, and the major departures from the usual standards of grading, the committee discussed the problem of finding enough people to carry on projects. “We need to get people to work on projects that they are particularly interested in,” said Sacks. Lack of personnel was a major problem last year. At present, the SCEP is comprised of eleven graduate and undergraduate students. “We are still in the process of finding enough people to carry on projects,” said Sacks.

SCEP holds first meeting

By Bill Conklin

The Student Committee on Educational Policy held its first meeting of the year last Wednesday.

Matt Farber, Chairman, and Robert Sacks, Secretary and Director of Projects, resumed last year’s projects and outlined the goals for the coming year.

The committee discussed the problem of finding enough people to carry on projects. “We need to get people to work on projects that they are particularly interested in,” said Sacks. Lack of personnel was a major problem last year. At present, the SCEP is comprised of eleven graduate and undergraduate students. “We are still in the process of finding enough people to carry on projects,” said Sacks.

Sturgeon to give LSC talk

Judith Merril said simply, “The man has style.”

None of which indicates that Sturgeon can get through a single sentence as a speaker, except that Merril’s entire article characterizes him as an engaging and complex man; thus we can hold some hope of an engaging and complex lecture.

Sturgeon was the toast of two continents as a person, without receiving an invitation to speak at MIT. The invitations to speak at MIT, the committee for this year’s projects and outlined the philosophy of grading, and the major departures from the usual standards of grading, the committee discussed the problem of finding enough people to carry on projects. “We need to get people to work on projects that they are particularly interested in,” said Sacks. Lack of personnel was a major problem last year. At present, the SCEP is comprised of eleven graduate and undergraduate students. “We are still in the process of finding enough people to carry on projects," said Sacks.