MIT booties lose 4-2 to Bowdoin, 3rd at Keene Tourney

By Glenn Brownstein

MIT's booties completed their 1973 pre-season schedule Sunday with a 4-2 loss to Bowdoin at Bridges Field. Along with MIT's third-place finish last weekend in the Keene State Invitational Tournament, the booties put their final pre-season mark at 2-2-3.

Bowdoin scored twice in the first half, once at 11:14 on a low shot inside the penalty area, and again at 36:33 on a corner kick that deflected off the leg of goalie Rich Straff '74.

The first half was marked by a good, short-passing, positionally sound attack by Bowdoin, and generally sloppy play by MIT. Tech's attack was limited to a number of two or three-pass drives downtown, as their short-passing attack was unable to move due to poor positioning.

In the second half, MIT's one serious first half opportunity came five minutes into the game when Kentus '73 was tipped inside the penalty area, giving MIT a penalty kick, but that shot by Yoshida '71 pulled wide to the left.

In the second half, Bowdoin scored first at 57:21 on a deflected corner kick, followed by MIT's first tally by Yoshida in 72:28 on a breakdown down the right side.

This goal sparked the team's play, as their aggressiveness and passing improved somewhat over the first half. MIT missed two very close opportunities, one on a breakaway by Yoshida, and another by Mitri on a breakaway down the left side.

The game was not a total defeat. MIT's first half was stronger than their second half play. However, the second half was characterized by a number of Mitri's errors, and a breakdown down the right side.

MIT scored the concluding goal at 85:19 on a corner kick by Yushi.

MIT's problems Sunday were the ones that plagued them during their entire pre-season schedule: poor positional play, sloppy passing, and only sporadic aggressiveness. While the tale of the tape for this year's pre-season may not be as favorable as last year's, MIT's play was far from sloppy and they found the key to success was a return to the fundamentals that made them a contender last year.

Baseball: 14-3 loss to MBCC

By Dan Guest

A devastating 14-3 loss to MBCC last Thursday by the Tech baseball team seemed to halt any fading momentum the team had gained after their early success.

The game started off well for the Techs, as they put up a 1-0 lead after an inni
