A Cambridge youth was listed in good condition last night at Cambridge City Hospital after he was struck by a car at 77 Mass Ave last Wednesday at around 7:40 p.m. His name was given as Thomas McNamee, a 24-year-old junior at MIT, who was found unresponsive at the scene. Emergency medical personnel were unable to reach him and he was transported to the hospital in critical condition.

The 21 acres of land, located in the White Mountain National Forest were granted to the Outing Club last year by Northeastern University. This year, the club is planning to offer several outings to the New Hampshire area. The outings are planned and led by members of the club.

The one-room cabin was built last summer by five outing club members. It is a converted World War II cabin, and it is being used as a place for students to gather and share stories.

The club also owns an older cabin, a converted World War II building, in New Hampshire. The club uses this cabin as a weekend retreat.

The Campus Outing Club promotes outdoor activities by sponsoring several outings in the New England area each weekend. These outings are planned and led by the students.

While many may postpone a trip, outings are usually led by members who have been on previous outings.

According to Bruce Mackenzie '74, the club director, "Most of the people heading trips usually only drive a few times before coming to MIT." Since it is necessary on most outings to have experienced guides, a main objective of the club is to train new leaders.

Members are taught first aid and given instruction in predicting weather and judging trails.

"The purpose of physical education at MIT is to introduce students to activities that they can continue doing for the rest of their lives," Professor Edward Crocker, Director of Physical Education, said this as a primary objective for the present fourth-quarter PE requirement.

Students are encouraged, but not obligated, to complete the necessary courses by the end of the semester. Crocker said, "We'd like students to use what they have learned while still at the Institute." If students take a sport for credit several terms before graduation, he said they can join a team or take a more advanced course that is offered.

The Institute has never given a degree to a student who has not completed the PE requirement for any reason other than a medical one. Those who have attempted to avoid this rule have failed.

According to Crocker, students with a lack of sufficient amount of courses in graduation "usually wind up taking a bunch of courses during the last minute." He also mentioned that only one student has not experienced the benefits of physical education and has been withheld for this reason in recent years. The students referred to said that he "ought to be made purely on the criteria of the administrator in the advice faculty, according to Sullivan, will ask only such questions as "name, address, place and date of birth, sex, year in order, career plans, your major, your minor." Sullivan stated that a Uniform Voter Law is currently in operation in the General Assembly.

According to Sullivan, early voting for MIT students is not an option, and the student vote is expected to be small this year for food as compared to about $67 last year in order to implement this policy.
