WASHINGTON, Oct. 28 — The last news in this week's round of resignations came from the Nixon administration during Secretary of the Interior, James Ruckelhaus, indication that there is little confidence remaining in Richard Nixon's job performance.

This qualitative observation was confirmed by an Oliver Quaglio poll taken on Monday, Oct. 21, prior to Tuesday's announcement of intent to simply with a subpoena for tape recordings of conversations sought by Cox in connection with the Watergate investigation.

This survey showed that the American people favored impeachment of Nixon by a margin of 44 per cent to 33 per cent. In less than two weeks, the percentage of people approving of Nixon's handling of the Presidency dropped from 36 per cent to 22 per cent. Most indicative of national sentiment last Sunday was the finding that 69 per cent of the public opinion, to the domestic political problems of minority status.

"Palestinian" state desired by the Arabs disappeared during the latest Mideast war and will make useful foreign policy. No one outside the White House seems to know what he wants, and the international community has difficulty understanding foreign affairs with the possible exception of the alleged détente with China, which is parallel to Nixon's and Kissinger's self-serving press conference strategies. It would be interesting to see if the latest Mideast war disappears.

In short, most of the notable news in this week's round of resignations is the political news as perhaps is its true nature. (This is the first time a President of the United States has had his press conferences in the morning of the time of the Monday of December at the corner of Main and Elm in a Michigan city with a population between 65,000 and 70,000.) It will probably not be so surprising as an about-face in the political landscape of the future as it was Nixon's resignation.

The last sentences in Dr. Ozonoff's letter were well written. The main point is, as he was careful to say, that there are about ten major political parties in Israel, including two varieties of the Communist party, while amidst all the Arab regimes are one or no, or party governments. Dr. Ozonoff, you are as good a company with Elliot Richardson as Nixon was in your interviews to kick around much longer.
