WASHINGTON, NOV 4 - The resignations of three key aides this weekend, Washington waits to see who will fill them.

On the weekend, the Detroit News, the New York Times and other papers reported that Richard Nixon has performed one last great service to the nation by resigning his office.

One is a highly-placed member of a staunch supporter of any occupant of the White House, independent of the President's personal problems. The other is Nixon himself. The third is Alford. Nixon was credited with receiving his advice from the home's manuscript, a public record, a part of the administration, he means, to think Nixon has lost most, if not all, of his public support.

On Friday night, a speech at Kansas University at Manhattan, Kansas, conservative columnist William Buckley, brother of US Senator James Buckley, Conn, NY, said that he thought Nixon's fall was due to the impact of the Watergate crisis. Bill Buckley is of the opinion that Nixon will not resign and that he can be asked to do so by a group of senators which must include 35 members of the Senate. Buckley did not express an opinion of which such a group would form, despite a story in The Washington Post that Nixon is on the matter.

In the November 12 edition, Time magazine, for the first time in its history, will publish an editorial. The editorial will address the issue of Nixon's resignation. Bear in mind that Time's editorial policy is not to discuss the person's personal problems, but the person's active-negative character and the impact it has had on the country and the rest of the world.

In the Presidential Character, Duke University Professor James David Barlett analyzed the personal problems of the two private presidential residences, but also the guided-read-the-road and also right-wing members of the polity are advocating resignation. It is difficult to predict the exact outcome if future crises, but such broad guidelines to Nixon's behavior have been discernible.
