Colleges abolishing ROTC may lose tuition funds

By Darre Moore

Many New England universities could lose millions of dollars in tuition if they try to phase out the ROTC programs, a study by the Institute of Education Sciences has found. The report, which is based on data from 1960 to 1970, shows that the phase-out of ROTC programs at many universities would result in a loss of tuition revenue of up to $40 million per institution.

The study, conducted by the Institute of Education Sciences, found that the phase-out of ROTC programs at many universities would result in a loss of tuition revenue of up to $40 million per institution. The study was based on data from 1960 to 1970 and found that the phase-out of ROTC programs at many universities would result in a loss of tuition revenue of up to $40 million per institution.

The study, conducted by the Institute of Education Sciences, found that the phase-out of ROTC programs at many universities would result in a loss of tuition revenue of up to $40 million per institution. The study was based on data from 1960 to 1970 and found that the phase-out of ROTC programs at many universities would result in a loss of tuition revenue of up to $40 million per institution.