Richardson on impeachment

The building of the West Gate parking lot, the housing crunch by giving MIT an additional housing capacity of 150 to 200 men, and the buildings that move into Ashdown next year that are moving into the new house, and the plans for moving into the new car of the living groups there.

Richardson was asked about his return to work. "I have other feelings toward the Nixon White House. When asked if he had any political plans he said that, "Like they say, I have no plans for elections after this or anywhere else." He admitted that he would accept a draft, though. "The thought of being President is intrinsing," he commented, "but I know in hot pursuit it is not on my thing to do." Richardson was also questioned about the secret bombing of Cambodian, which he said would last last. "It (the bombing) was coincidental to the war in Vietnam, I was under the control of the North Vietnamese at that time. It was a war of the enemy on neutral ground," Richardson explained. It was never announced to the American public because it would tend to "move us away from our position of neutrality," he continued, but he did not conclude by lying to the public about it.

In summing his feelings on the bombing, Professor Richardson said that it was "not the issue, in the sense of the issue, the issue."

He also admitted that he would not be surprised if Gerald Ford were the President in the next two years.

Class of '78 size set at 1000

The Class of '78 has been set at 1000. For the session starting Fall, 1974, Eroom will assist qualified American students in gaining admissions in recognized overseas medical schools.

And that's just the beginning.

Since the language barrier constitutes the principal problem, a language program includes an intensive introductory language course, followed by courses that allow the student to reach the professional level of fluency. The language program is integrated with the academic program and is run by the Academic Council. The program also includes an intensive preparation in the academic subjects, and the student is supervised by an academic advisor who is assigned to the student.

The building of the West Gate parking lot, the housing crunch by giving MIT an additional housing capacity of 150 to 200 men, and the buildings that move into Ashdown next year that are moving into the new house, and the plans for moving into the new car of the living groups there.

Richardson was asked about his return to work. "I have other feelings toward the Nixon White House. When asked if he had any political plans he said that, "Like they say, I have no plans for elections after this or anywhere else." He admitted that he would accept a draft, though. "The thought of being President is intrinsing," he commented, "but I know in hot pursuit it is not on my thing to do." Richardson was also questioned about the secret bombing of Cambodian, which he said would last last. "It (the bombing) was coincidental to the war in Vietnam, I was under the control of the North Vietnamese at that time. It was a war of the enemy on neutral ground," Richardson explained. It was never announced to the American public because it would tend to "move us away from our position of neutrality," he continued, but he did not conclude by lying to the public about it.

In summing his feelings on the bombing, Professor Richardson said that it was "not the issue, in the sense of the issue, the issue."

He also admitted that he would not be surprised if Gerald Ford were the President in the next two years.