in In case of Insomnia, Read This
By Storm Kueffman
The objective being to turn you off for a few minutes is something not quite as simple as it seems. I know, because I have tried. The best that I can do is to try and make you think about what you are reading. And if you are using this...well, let's just say that you are reading it.

The idea is that you will be able to read this page in a few minutes and then go on with your other activities. If you are not interested in the subject matter, you can always skip it.

The greatest ideas of past editors (God not soul) have run from long-windedness to boredom, and I am sure that I will be no exception. There is an occasional landlord, be it true or not, known to becoming editor. All editors operate under the delusion that they can write well and are therefore not interested, in other words, that it is their duty to spew forth words all day and night, regardless of whether their words are understood.

So you undoubtedly believe that you will have to sit through another term of yawn-inspiring lectures reading the word "another word" over and over again. That is what you are afraid of, right? No, of course not. You are probably thinking, "I am sure that I will understand it once I have read it twice or three times." And that is why I have written this page.

Norm Sandler (Executive Editor) is my best friend and most likely to be called for me. If you ever find yourself on the wrong side of the fence, you can always call him. He will tell you that I am a very nice person, and that you should not be afraid of me. But I will tell you that I am not a very nice person, and that you should not be afraid of me. I will tell you that I am a very nice person, and that you should not be afraid of me. I will tell you that I am a very nice person, and that you should not be afraid of me. I will tell you that I am a very nice person, and that you should not be afraid of me. I will tell you that I am a very nice person, and that you should not be afraid of me.

I am not a very nice person, and you should not be afraid of me.

That is why I have written this page. Because I am not a very nice person, and you should not be afraid of me.
