ing up the House, was released recently; the renovations are planned for the complete renovation of the dormitory. An article in "Architecture Plus" magazine early last fall stated that the MIT administration had been lax in maintaining the dorm, and claimed that modifications were made over the years to increase the housing capacity of the dorms. Browsing at that time denied that the maintenance had been neglected.

Rise in pre-law interest won't cause overflow of Baker's six floors, was chosen as the site for the project due to its economic feasibility and aesthetic desirability, according to Moody. The floor is typical of Baker floors, and the west section has a large lounge area, carpeting in the hallways, improved lighting, wall hangings, and free-standing cabinets in the bathrooms. Individual rooms were remodeled.

Kenneth Browning, Assistant Dean for Student Affairs, said the next step towards improving the dormitory is to translate the reports into a working program. The experience on the fifth floor will be useful in terms of ideas and functions," Browning added, however, that it would be difficult to predict when or if large-scale resources could be allocated for the complete renovation of the dormitory.

Many of the House's residents feel that a complete renovation is a necessary step to prevent the further deterioration of the dormitory. An article in "Architecture Plus" magazine early last fall stated that the MIT administration had been lax in maintaining the dorm, and claimed that modifications were made over the years to increase the housing capacity of the dorms. Browsing at that time denied that the maintenance had been neglected.

The doomsday people will be wrong, because the number of the lawyers working out of the law profession may increase.

There are several forces which may drive this number up, he explained. The idea of pre-paid legal services, a benefit some unions are already requesting, will require an increase in legal forces. Also influential in the need for lawyers will be federal-supported legal services, and the possibility of class action suits.

MIT students have not suffered much from the increase in applications, however. "An MIT education is a very good, and increasingly so," Nyhart added.
