Golfer's bow in season finale

MIT's varsity golfers closed out their spring season last week with losses to Harvard, 6½-½, and to Trinity, 5½-½, in a triangular match at Bras Burn Country Club in Newrion.

The losses dropped the Engi- neer's record to two wins and seven losses for the spring, the wins coming over Belknap and Lowell Tech. Overall, the golfers completed their year at .500, having won six of seven matches played during the fall.

In the final match, five of the seven Harvard men turned in scores in the 70s, defeating Trinity 74-71 on that side of the tri- angle. Harvard’s seventh man was the day’s medalist with a 72.

The losses to Trinity are considered a major blow to MIT's chances of securing a spot in the NCAA competition as the team approaches the end of the season.

The team's performance in the triangular match can be attributed to the consistent play of their top players, who have been able to maintain a steady flow of scores throughout the season.

Overall, the golfers have shown significant improvement in their skills and have demonstrated a strong team spirit. The challenges faced during the season have provided valuable lessons for the golfers, preparing them for future tournaments.

Looking forward to the remaining matches, the team remains confident, with a focus on improving their game and securing a strong finish to their season.
