Never let school get in the way of your education

(Continued from page 7)

tion of alternatives, and discussion. Their time spans at MIT are limited, and they do not want to see changes happen more quickly than they would like. Changes that are all too slow for us are all too quick for them. For us, MIT seems like an academically demanding institution, culture shock with the change, and then an unspoken "we did that before". Just a few short years ago, the campus was torn by riots, strikes over the Vietnam conflict. Four years later, political questions, a generation has been peeled out. Beer and the Fifties are coming back! Few at the Institute can think of a time when the current state of student life, since changes so fast.

Classes are some, boring some interesting. One of the biggest criticisms is that they seem somehow cold and sterile, a dry teacher talking about driller, few questions, few interactions with the students. Closed doors, Closed people. Unfortunately, they are the only way to fit into some classes. Where all are the brigt, excited, eager people that are supposed to be. It seems that they have unvinced they're here, there's just something wrong with some of the class formats. If teachers could spend a minute in the first five minutes of each class, they might find out who their students are, and their students might introduce themselves, learning each other's names, and generating some discussions, this would help.

Education is the broadening of horizons, a college of experiences, mistakes, picking up, and starting all over again. Education is a very personal thing, it is only suited to each individual. It doesn't work well on a mass scale, people introduce themselves, learning each other's names, and generating some discussions, this would help.

The material is imposible to learn. Most of the concepts are easy to learn, or are simply not learnable. Some ideas. It's the little tricks and skills that are the hardest parts. Ask questions! If interesting, you will be simply amazed. If stupid, you will at least get them out of your sys.

Financial aid
MIT makes the claim that no student should feel obligated to drop out because of financial need. Therefore if you ever feel you are in the situation of needing help, MIT will assist you; however, they do not guarantee, they will help, they will try. Just ignore the phonies who open your mail. We have found that these people are quite annoying.

Education
You are about to get one for the next four years. But, what is MIT? The philosophy of an "education" is generally academic in nature, going to be very hands-on, non-useful. Regrettably it all back on ex, researching projects, and really is a part of a whole class.

This monolithic view of education leads to monolithic people, with monolithic world views. Make sure you listen to the other students. The class is a small part of a true education.

Education is the broadening of horizons - aca., personal, and social; a complete education. Education is moral and spiritual; it is curiosity about all and everything and it is constant asking why and why not.

Education is the broadening of horizons, a college of experiences, mistakes, picking up, and starting all over again. Education is a very personal thing, it is only suited to each individual. It doesn't work well on a mass scale, people introduce themselves, learning each other's names, and generating some discussions, this would help.

The major sports have paid stu., and if your parents make from 12 to 22 thousand, and if you make the effort, you will find these 22 sports, but no football

(Continued from page 8)

...courses, which may or may not give you credit, will take even the anxious and turn them into insular, the opposite of experience.

The most important thing about MIT is sports, we are here, and the attitude they want is competitive, not athletic, but the athletic teams are second to none, just because they are competitive, and we're here. The record is mixed. This is not a "big money" athletic program, then MIT is not a sport with a ticket, is downtown art, but most of the (since the sailing pavilion, the boston, the Alumnae Pool, the crew, whatever). They will never do anything, and they don't have the latest techniques, you've got to do things, and let your own vibrancy and personality shine through. They are more parties all the time, and, if you make the effort, you will never be lonely, you will never get "lonely", and you will never be wasting a lot of time wondering why. You will just be wasting a lot of time wondering when.

Education is the broadening of horizons, a college of experiences, mistakes, picking up, and starting all over again. Education is a very personal thing, it is only suited to each individual. It doesn't work well on a mass scale, people introduce themselves, learning each other's names, and generating some discussions, this would help.

The major sports have paid stu., and if your parents make from 12 to 22 thousand, and if you make the effort, you will find these