In case responsible should certainly be found and held liable for the damages that they have incurred, the students and staff- who have been stung by the red ants of vandalism and harassment- are now left with the task of being the managers in a few years. Others feel that they cannot- negotiate further. Such a refusal to state its objectives.

The CIA and covert action

The Chilean incident is one of the many cases in which the CIA has been involved. During those elections, the CIA spent almost $500,000 on parties opposing the Socialist party. Another $350,000 was spent in an unsuccessful attempt to bribe the Chinese Congress to vote for the incumbent prime minister. After Allende became prime minister, $45,000 was spent on covert-anti-Allende forces in preparation for the 1973 municipal elections.

The official response to the Chilean revelation by the Ford Administration has been to shrug them off as "business as usual." President Ford, in his televised speech last week, said福德 the CIA's activities as being "in the best interest of the Chilean people." The President said, in response to a question about America's right to meddle in the internal affairs of other countries, that the US "has always" been engaged in such activities, and they were a recognized part of this country's foreign policy.

The Prime Minister of State Henry Kissinger in testimony before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee last week, explained that the agency had poured almost $11 million into Chile between 1962 and the military coup of September, 1973, which toppled the Allende government. Allende was killed during the coup.

Colby's testimony, as released by Rep. Michael Harrington, D-Mass., reveals how many of the money was spent. About $50,000 was spent in support of the Christian Democratic Party during the 1964 elections in Chile, in which that party defeated Allende's Socialist party. Another $550,000 was spent in support of anti-Allende forces in preparation for the 1973 municipal elections.

The response to the Chinese revelation by the Ford Administration has been to shrug them off as "business as usual." President Ford, in his televised speech last week, said that the CIA's activities as being "in the best interest of the Chilean people." The President said, in response to a question about America's right to meddle in the internal affairs of other countries, that the US "has always" been engaged in such activities, and they were a recognized part of this country's foreign policy.

The Prime Minister of State Henry Kissinger in testimony before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee last week, explained that the agency had poured almost $11 million into Chile between 1962 and the military coup of September, 1973, which toppled the Allende government. Allende was killed during the coup.

Colby's testimony, as released by Rep. Michael Harrington, D-Mass., reveals how many of the money was spent. About $50,000 was spent in support of the Christian Democratic Party during the 1964 elections in Chile, in which that party defeated Allende's Socialist party. Another $550,000 was spent in support of anti-Allende forces in preparation for the 1973 municipal elections.

The official response to the Chinese revelation by the Ford Administration has been to shrug them off as "business as usual." President Ford, in his televised speech last week, said that the CIA's activities as being "in the best interest of the Chilean people." The President said, in response to a question about America's right to meddle in the internal affairs of other countries, that the US "has always" been engaged in such activities, and they were a recognized part of this country's foreign policy.

The Prime Minister of State Henry Kissinger in testimony before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee last week, explained that the agency had poured almost $11 million into Chile between 1962 and the military coup of September, 1973, which toppled the Allende government. Allende was killed during the coup.

Colby's testimony, as released by Rep. Michael Harrington, D-Mass., reveals how many of the money was spent. About $50,000 was spent in support of the Christian Democratic Party during the 1964 elections in Chile, in which that party defeated Allende's Socialist party. Another $550,000 was spent in support of anti-Allende forces in preparation for the 1973 municipal elections.

The official response to the Chinese revelation by the Ford Administration has been to shrug them off as "business as usual." President Ford, in his televised speech last week, said that the CIA's activities as being "in the best interest of the Chilean people." The President said, in response to a question about America's right to meddle in the internal affairs of other countries, that the US "has always" been engaged in such activities, and they were a recognized part of this country's foreign policy.