Danny Schecter

Seminar held for Viet student

By Gerald Rudack

Nguyen H. An, a Vietnamese student at MIT faced with deportation, told an audience last week that he would not return to his country until the Paris peace agreement is implemented in full.

An presented evidence of threats and political oppression by the South Vietnamese government. President Nguyen Van Thieu, "If we go back to Saigon," An said. "we are concerned we would face political revenge" including imprisonment and torture.

The war in Vietnam is a war of national liberation rather than a civil war, An stated, adding that the Thieu regime is merely a puppet of the United States. "Sooner or later Thieu must go and the Paris agreement must be implemented," An said.

Although the Paris agreement called for the release of political prisoners held in part in the Vietnam conflict, the South Vietnamese still hold "half of the total number of political prisoners in the whole world," An said.

Genetic research

(Continued from page 3)

grains and toxins, and second, any animal virus genes.

The danger in the first type of experimentation is that anti-biotic resistant bacteria could control the growth of the resistant bacteria formed. As for the latter, animal virus genes have recently been found to cause cancer, though it remains difficult to determine exactly what viruses are responsible.

The committee also called for the release of all political prisoners held by parties in the Vietnam conflict, the Steelman said, and stressed that "half of the total number of political prisoners in the whole world" was denied aid.

An said.

A monitory International, an organization which monitors political repression worldwide, estimated that there are between 70,000 and 130,000 prisoners in South Vietnam.

By Gerald Rudack

An, a Vietnamese student at MIT, told an audience last week that he would not return to his country until the Paris peace agreement is implemented in full.

An presented evidence of threats and political oppression by the South Vietnamese government. President Nguyen Van Thieu, "If we go back to Saigon," An said. "we are concerned we would face political revenge" including imprisonment and torture.

The war in Vietnam is a war of national liberation rather than a civil war, An stated, adding that the Thieu regime is merely a puppet of the United States. "Sooner or later Thieu must go and the Paris agreement must be implemented," An said.

Although the Paris agreement called for the release of political prisoners held in part in the Vietnam conflict, the Steelman said, and stressed that "half of the total number of political prisoners in the whole world" was denied aid.

An said.

A monitory International, an organization which monitors political repression worldwide, estimated that there are between 70,000 and 130,000 prisoners in South Vietnam.

By Gerald Rudack

An, a Vietnamese student at MIT, told an audience last week that he would not return to his country until the Paris peace agreement is implemented in full.

An presented evidence of threats and political oppression by the South Vietnamese government. President Nguyen Van Thieu, "If we go back to Saigon," An said. "we are concerned we would face political revenge" including imprisonment and torture.

The war in Vietnam is a war of national liberation rather than a civil war, An stated, adding that the Thieu regime is merely a puppet of the United States. "Sooner or later Thieu must go and the Paris agreement must be implemented," An said.

Although the Paris agreement called for the release of political prisoners held in part in the Vietnam conflict, the Steelman said, and stressed that "half of the total number of political prisoners in the whole world" was denied aid.

An said.

A monitory International, an organization which monitors political repression worldwide, estimated that there are between 70,000 and 130,000 prisoners in South Vietnam.

By Gerald Rudack

An, a Vietnamese student at MIT, told an audience last week that he would not return to his country until the Paris peace agreement is implemented in full.

An presented evidence of threats and political oppression by the South Vietnamese government. President Nguyen Van Thieu, "If we go back to Saigon," An said. "we are concerned we would face political revenge" including imprisonment and torture.

The war in Vietnam is a war of national liberation rather than a civil war, An stated, adding that the Thieu regime is merely a puppet of the United States. "Sooner or later Thieu must go and the Paris agreement must be implemented," An said.

Although the Paris agreement called for the release of political prisoners held in part in the Vietnam conflict, the Steelman said, and stressed that "half of the total number of political prisoners in the whole world" was denied aid.

An said.

A monitory International, an organization which monitors political repression worldwide, estimated that there are between 70,000 and 130,000 prisoners in South Vietnam.

By Gerald Rudack

An, a Vietnamese student at MIT, told an audience last week that he would not return to his country until the Paris peace agreement is implemented in full.

An presented evidence of threats and political oppression by the South Vietnamese government. President Nguyen Van Thieu, "If we go back to Saigon," An said. "we are concerned we would face political revenge" including imprisonment and torture.

The war in Vietnam is a war of national liberation rather than a civil war, An stated, adding that the Thieu regime is merely a puppet of the United States. "Sooner or later Thieu must go and the Paris agreement must be implemented," An said.

Although the Paris agreement called for the release of political prisoners held in part in the Vietnam conflict, the Steelman said, and stressed that "half of the total number of political prisoners in the whole world" was denied aid.

An said.

A monitory International, an organization which monitors political repression worldwide, estimated that there are between 70,000 and 130,000 prisoners in South Vietnam.

By Gerald Rudack

An, a Vietnamese student at MIT, told an audience last week that he would not return to his country until the Paris peace agreement is implemented in full.

An presented evidence of threats and political oppression by the South Vietnamese government. President Nguyen Van Thieu, "If we go back to Saigon," An said. "we are concerned we would face political revenge" including imprisonment and torture.

The war in Vietnam is a war of national liberation rather than a civil war, An stated, adding that the Thieu regime is merely a puppet of the United States. "Sooner or later Thieu must go and the Paris agreement must be implemented," An said.

Although the Paris agreement called for the release of political prisoners held in part in the Vietnam conflict, the Steelman said, and stressed that "half of the total number of political prisoners in the whole world" was denied aid.

An said.

A monitory International, an organization which monitors political repression worldwide, estimated that there are between 70,000 and 130,000 prisoners in South Vietnam.

By Gerald Rudack

An, a Vietnamese student at MIT, told an audience last week that he would not return to his country until the Paris peace agreement is implemented in full.

An presented evidence of threats and political oppression by the South Vietnamese government. President Nguyen Van Thieu, "If we go back to Saigon," An said. "we are concerned we would face political revenge" including imprisonment and torture.

The war in Vietnam is a war of national liberation rather than a civil war, An stated, adding that the Thieu regime is merely a puppet of the United States. "Sooner or later Thieu must go and the Paris agreement must be implemented," An said.

Although the Paris agreement called for the release of political prisoners held in part in the Vietnam conflict, the Steelman said, and stressed that "half of the total number of political prisoners in the whole world" was denied aid.

An said.

A monitory International, an organization which monitors political repression worldwide, estimated that there are between 70,000 and 130,000 prisoners in South Vietnam.