It may sound like a pipe dream, when one considers the American political scene, that the Left should form a program of political and social action. There have been so many such programs, but none of them has achieved anything like the success of the social movements that grew up in the 1960s. The reason for this is that the Left has failed to develop a coherent strategy. It has been too idealistic, too focused on the abstract concept of revolution, and too much on the surface of things. The result is that the Left has not been able to make the changes that are necessary to create a truly democratic society.

The Left must develop a strategy that is based on a clear understanding of the nature of the problem. It must be able to identify the key issues and to develop a plan of action that is both practical and realistic. It must also be able to mobilize the support of the people who are affected by the problem.

The Left must also be able to communicate its message clearly and effectively. It must be able to explain its strategy to the people and to win their support. It must also be able to build alliances with other groups and movements that share its goals.

The Left must also be able to withstand the attacks of its opponents. It must be able to defend its positions and to counter the arguments of those who are opposed to its program. It must also be able to adapt to changing circumstances and to adjust its strategy as necessary.

The Left must also be able to work within the existing political system. It must be able to participate in the democratic process and to influence the decisions that are made. It must also be able to use the legal system to protect its rights and to challenge the actions of those who are opposed to its program.

The Left must also be able to build coalitions with other groups and movements. It must be able to work with trade unions, with students, with other social movements, and with other political parties. It must also be able to build alliances with foreign governments and with other countries.

The Left must also be able to mobilize the resources that are necessary to carry out its program. It must be able to raise funds, to organize events, and to build a network of supporters.

The Left must also be able to develop a strong media presence. It must be able to use the media to spread its message and to influence public opinion. It must also be able to use the Internet to build a base of supporters and to mobilize resources.

The Left must also be able to develop a strong sense of identity. It must be able to develop a unique vision and to promote a set of values that is distinct from other political movements. It must also be able to develop a strong sense of community and to build a sense of belonging among its supporters.

The Left must also be able to develop a strong leadership. It must be able to attract and develop strong leaders who are able to articulate its message and to mobilize its supporters. It must also be able to develop a strong sense of accountability and to hold its leaders accountable for their actions.

The Left must also be able to develop a strong sense of discipline. It must be able to organize its activities and to coordinate its efforts. It must also be able to develop a strong sense of unity and to work together towards a common goal.

The Left must also be able to develop a strong sense of strategy. It must be able to think strategically and to plan its actions with care. It must also be able to adapt to changing circumstances and to adjust its strategy as necessary.

The Left must also be able to develop a strong sense of commitment. It must be able to stay the course and to work hard even when the going is tough. It must also be able to sustain its efforts over a long period of time.

The Left must also be able to develop a strong sense of sacrifice. It must be able to make the sacrifices that are necessary to carry out its program. It must also be able to develop a strong sense of altruism and to be willing to give of itself for the sake of others.

The Left must also be able to develop a strong sense of tradition. It must be able to build on the traditions of the past and to develop new traditions of its own. It must also be able to develop a strong sense of history and to learn from the mistakes of the past.

The Left must also be able to develop a strong sense of innovation. It must be able to think creatively and to develop new ideas. It must also be able to develop a strong sense of flexibility and to be willing to adapt to changing circumstances.

The Left must also be able to develop a strong sense of community. It must be able to build a sense of belonging among its supporters and to develop a strong sense of identity. It must also be able to develop a strong sense of solidarity and to work together towards a common goal.

The Left must also be able to develop a strong sense of solidarity. It must be able to work with other groups and movements towards a common goal. It must also be able to develop a strong sense of solidarity with other communities and to work together towards a common goal.

The Left must also be able to develop a strong sense of resilience. It must be able to withstand the attacks of its opponents and to continue its work even when the going is tough. It must also be able to develop a strong sense of hope and to be willing to continue its work even when the outcome is uncertain.

The Left must also be able to develop a strong sense of determination. It must be able to work hard and to persist even when the going is tough. It must also be able to develop a strong sense of determination to succeed and to be willing to continue its work even when the outcome is uncertain.

The Left must also be able to develop a strong sense of dedication. It must be able to put its energies into the work that it does and to be willing to work hard to achieve its goals. It must also be able to develop a strong sense of dedication to the cause and to be willing to continue its work even when the outcome is uncertain.

The Left must also be able to develop a strong sense of vision. It must be able to see the future and to be willing to work towards it. It must also be able to develop a strong sense of imagination and to be willing to think creatively about the future.

The Left must also be able to develop a strong sense of courage. It must be able to take risks and to be willing to face danger. It must also be able to develop a strong sense of bravery and to be willing to stand up for what is right even when the outcome is uncertain.

The Left must also be able to develop a strong sense of commitment. It must be able to stay the course and to work hard even when the going is tough. It must also be able to sustain its efforts over a long period of time.

The Left must also be able to develop a strong sense of discipline. It must be able to organize its activities and to coordinate its efforts. It must also be able to develop a strong sense of unity and to work together towards a common goal.

The Left must also be able to develop a strong sense of strategy. It must be able to think strategically and to plan its actions with care. It must also be able to adapt to changing circumstances and to adjust its strategy as necessary.

The Left must also be able to develop a strong sense of commitment. It must be able to put its energies into the work that it does and to be willing to work hard to achieve its goals. It must also be able to develop a strong sense of dedication to the cause and to be willing to continue its work even when the outcome is uncertain.

The Left must also be able to develop a strong sense of dedication. It must be able to put its energies into the work that it does and to be willing to work hard to achieve its goals. It must also be able to develop a strong sense of dedication to the cause and to be willing to continue its work even when the outcome is uncertain.

The Left must also be able to develop a strong sense of vision. It must be able to see the future and to be willing to work towards it. It must also be able to develop a strong sense of imagination and to be willing to think creatively about the future.

The Left must also be able to develop a strong sense of courage. It must be able to take risks and to be willing to face danger. It must also be able to develop a strong sense of bravery and to be willing to stand up for what is right even when the outcome is uncertain.

The Left must also be able to develop a strong sense of commitment. It must be able to stay the course and to work hard even when the going is tough. It must also be able to sustain its efforts over a long period of time.

The Left must also be able to develop a strong sense of discipline. It must be able to organize its activities and to coordinate its efforts. It must also be able to develop a strong sense of unity and to work together towards a common goal.

The Left must also be able to develop a strong sense of strategy. It must be able to think strategically and to plan its actions with care. It must also be able to adapt to changing circumstances and to adjust its strategy as necessary.

The Left must also be able to develop a strong sense of commitment. It must be able to put its energies into the work that it does and to be willing to work hard to achieve its goals. It must also be able to develop a strong sense of dedication to the cause and to be willing to continue its work even when the outcome is uncertain.

The Left must also be able to develop a strong sense of dedication. It must be able to put its energies into the work that it does and to be willing to work hard to achieve its goals. It must also be able to develop a strong sense of dedication to the cause and to be willing to continue its work even when the outcome is uncertain.

The Left must also be able to develop a strong sense of vision. It must be able to see the future and to be willing to work towards it. It must also be able to develop a strong sense of imagination and to be willing to think creatively about the future.

The Left must also be able to develop a strong sense of courage. It must be able to take risks and to be willing to face danger. It must also be able to develop a strong sense of bravery and to be willing to stand up for what is right even when the outcome is uncertain.

The Left must also be able to develop a strong sense of commitment. It must be able to stay the course and to work hard even when the going is tough. It must also be able to sustain its efforts over a long period of time.

The Left must also be able to develop a strong sense of discipline. It must be able to organize its activities and to coordinate its efforts. It must also be able to develop a strong sense of unity and to work together towards a common goal.

The Left must also be able to develop a strong sense of strategy. It must be able to think strategically and to plan its actions with care. It must also be able to adapt to changing circumstances and to adjust its strategy as necessary.

The Left must also be able to develop a strong sense of commitment. It must be able to put its energies into the work that it does and to be willing to work hard to achieve its goals. It must also be able to develop a strong sense of dedication to the cause and to be willing to continue its work even when the outcome is uncertain.

The Left must also be able to develop a strong sense of dedication. It must be able to put its energies into the work that it does and to be willing to work hard to achieve its goals. It must also be able to develop a strong sense of dedication to the cause and to be willing to continue its work even when the outcome is uncertain.