The Competition’s costs in education high

(Continued from page 4)
the world why the students in America’s schools should not be taught intense competition. But there is a wealth of reasons why they should. Only by doing so can the students, and the teachers, achieve maximum potential.

But the sad reality is that America’s schools and teachers are too often in competition among themselves and with their own students. The system of education is winning, not learning; that the kids are always competing, and that the quicker you do it, the better you are going to do.

You learn in school not to give a shit if the people you climb over are weak or small or blind. You understand that everybody is your enemy.

To the Editor:

I think that perhaps the point was missed that, while a show of ideology might encourage young people to risk their lives, it is not an end in itself. Nguyen should perhaps consider that.

I think there is something wrong when a person who is a lifelong pacifist goes to war against the Viet Nam can only gather fifty people together to listen to his talk. It is wrong when a speech by a Committee on Civil Rights on whose publications at least give some excuse for racism if they do not indeed foster it, is only protected by twenty-five people. Perhaps people should consider working for a show of activity. Now the residents of such a group are referred to as guards. Brinely is populated by “treaks” who do nothing other than concern themselves.

We’re becoming a populated of followers, maintaining the status quo without thinking about the consequences. This is not a small group of people interested in a few fringe plans, methods, and following is not adequate to affect this.

The purpose of this letter was only to have any opinion that something is very wrong here. I hope other people will agree or disagree with me, not resist the letter for the wrong to edit letters which are unnecessarily long.

John Lay 77

(The Tech welcomes Letters to the Editor. Please print all letters in receipt, typed material is preferred. Letters not sponsored by the UA, intramural, etc. do not need a letter that is unsigned or which does not identify the writer’s affiliation. The Tech reserves the right to edit letters which are unnecessarily long.)

More MIT Malady

(Continued from page 4)
world why the students in America’s schools should not be taught intense competition. But there is a wealth of reasons why they should. Only by doing so can the students, and the teachers, achieve maximum potential.

But the sad reality is that America’s schools and teachers are too often in competition among themselves and with their own students. The system of education is winning, not learning; that the kids are always competing, and that the quicker you do it, the better you are going to do.

You learn in school not to give a shit if the people you climb over are weak or small or blind. You understand that everybody is your enemy.

To the Editor:

I think that perhaps the point was missed that, while a show of ideology might encourage young people to risk their lives, it is not an end in itself. Nguyen should perhaps consider that.

I think there is something wrong when a person who is a lifelong pacifist goes to war against the Viet Nam can only gather fifty people together to listen to his talk. It is wrong when a speech by a Committee on Civil Rights on whose publications at least give some excuse for racism if they do not indeed foster it, is only protected by twenty-five people. Perhaps people should consider working for a show of activity. Now the residents of such a group are referred to as guards. Brinely is populated by “treaks” who do nothing other than concern themselves.

We’re becoming a populated of followers, maintaining the status quo without thinking about the consequences. This is not a small group of people interested in a few fringe plans, methods, and following is not adequate to affect this.

The purpose of this letter was only to have any opinion that something is very wrong here. I hope other people will agree or disagree with me, not resist the letter for the wrong to edit letters which are unnecessarily long.

John Lay 77

(The Tech welcomes Letters to the Editor. Please print all letters in receipt, typed material is preferred. Letters not sponsored by the UA, intramural, etc. do not need a letter that is unsigned or which does not identify the writer’s affiliation. The Tech reserves the right to edit letters which are unnecessarily long.)

More MIT Malady

(Continued from page 4)
world why the students in America’s schools should not be taught intense competition. But there is a wealth of reasons why they should. Only by doing so can the students, and the teachers, achieve maximum potential.

But the sad reality is that America’s schools and teachers are too often in competition among themselves and with their own students. The system of education is winning, not learning; that the kids are always competing, and that the quicker you do it, the better you are going to do.

You learn in school not to give a shit if the people you climb over are weak or small or blind. You understand that everybody is your enemy.

To the Editor:

I think that perhaps the point was missed that, while a show of ideology might encourage young people to risk their lives, it is not an end in itself. Nguyen should perhaps consider that.

I think there is something wrong when a person who is a lifelong pacifist goes to war against the Viet Nam can only gather fifty people together to listen to his talk. It is wrong when a speech by a Committee on Civil Rights on whose publications at least give some excuse for racism if they do not indeed foster it, is only protected by twenty-five people. Perhaps people should consider working for a show of activity. Now the residents of such a group are referred to as guards. Brinely is populated by “treaks” who do nothing other than concern themselves.

We’re becoming a populated of followers, maintaining the status quo without thinking about the consequences. This is not a small group of people interested in a few fringe plans, methods, and following is not adequate to affect this.

The purpose of this letter was only to have any opinion that something is very wrong here. I hope other people will agree or disagree with me, not resist the letter for the wrong to edit letters which are unnecessarily long.

John Lay 77

(The Tech welcomes Letters to the Editor. Please print all letters in receipt, typed material is preferred. Letters not sponsored by the UA, intramural, etc. do not need a letter that is unsigned or which does not identify the writer’s affiliation. The Tech reserves the right to edit letters which are unnecessarily long.)

More MIT Malady

(Continued from page 4)
world why the students in America’s schools should not be taught intense competition. But there is a wealth of reasons why they should. Only by doing so can the students, and the teachers, achieve maximum potential.

But the sad reality is that America’s schools and teachers are too often in competition among themselves and with their own students. The system of education is winning, not learning; that the kids are always competing, and that the quicker you do it, the better you are going to do.

You learn in school not to give a shit if the people you climb over are weak or small or blind. You understand that everybody is your enemy.

To the Editor:

I think that perhaps the point was missed that, while a show of ideology might encourage young people to risk their lives, it is not an end in itself. Nguyen should perhaps consider that.

I think there is something wrong when a person who is a lifelong pacifist goes to war against the Viet Nam can only gather fifty people together to listen to his talk. It is wrong when a speech by a Committee on Civil Rights on whose publications at least give some excuse for racism if they do not indeed foster it, is only protected by twenty-five people. Perhaps people should consider working for a show of activity. Now the residents of such a group are referred to as guards. Brinely is populated by “treaks” who do nothing other than concern themselves.

We’re becoming a populated of followers, maintaining the status quo without thinking about the consequences. This is not a small group of people interested in a few fringe plans, methods, and following is not adequate to affect this.

The purpose of this letter was only to have any opinion that something is very wrong here. I hope other people will agree or disagree with me, not resist the letter for the wrong to edit letters which are unnecessarily long.

John Lay 77

(The Tech welcomes Letters to the Editor. Please print all letters in receipt, typed material is preferred. Letters not sponsored by the UA, intramural, etc. do not need a letter that is unsigned or which does not identify the writer’s affiliation. The Tech reserves the right to edit letters which are unnecessarily long.)