MIT watches mail actions

By Mike NeName

MIT officials are keeping a close watch on activity in Washington which could have serious consequences on the fate of second-class postal permits—permits which go to magazines, newspapers, and periodicals to lower their mailing costs—by colleges and universities. A bill which should come up for floor action in the House of Representatives soon would make all colleges and universities eligible for second-class permits to mail their catalogues, bulletins, and other periodical publications.

The Bulletin was revoking permits for technical reasons for a number of school bulletins—the common "periodicals" under which schools have a number of annual publications so that they may qualify for a permit. Schools which have missed deadlines on mailing catalogues or have made minor mistakes in procedure have found themselves faced with having to pay a great deal more by mailing first class, or suffering from womaned service by being forced to listen through bulk mailing.

"There's been no class action against schools in general and the Post Office denies there is a trend," Lombardi said. "But we're being very careful about our deadlines.

The Bulletin is a series of five annual publications: the General Catalogue, the Course and Degree Programs Issue, the Report of the Treasurer, and the Summer Session Catalogue. Loss of second-class mailing privileges for the Bulletin would cost the Institute several thousands of dollars each year.

Every girl should save this ad.

If the girl you're going with should ever want an abortion, you should be able to tell her about ZPG.

We can help her get a legal, safe, inexpensive abortion. By an M.D. in a clinic or hospital. If she has the abortion during the first 10 weeks of pregnancy, it will cost only about $150. And no matter when she has it, there's no charge for the service.

So put this ad in your wallet or on the wall. So you know where to call: (212) 699-7794 Monday through Friday, between 10 a.m. and 5 p.m. New York time.
