At the 42nd Annual Ivey Regatta of the New England Intercollegiate Sailing Association at Willoughby Island, Maine, the MIT sailing team put together a fine showing by finishing third of the 19 schools that competed.

The regatta is held each year across the New England coast. MIT, which placed 12th in the 1974 Ivey, qualified for the 1975 Ivey by finishing third of the eight schools that compete for the Northeastern Championship, which is determined by the regatta.

The difference between finishing third and 12th last year was only three points, according to Bill Critch '77, MIT's varsity skipper.

The team consisted of three men, Bruce Landis '77, Bob Nilsson '76, and Bill Critch '77. The four remaining crew positions were held by Larry Puttli '78, Paul Erb '76, and Larry Bentley '76.

The team qualified for the 1975 Ivey by finishing third, behind Brown and Harvard, in the Northeastern Championship regatta held in August.

This year's regatta was held in the Willoughby Island area of Maine, which is known for its strong sailing conditions. The MIT team placed third of 19 schools that competed.

The team is looking to improve its performance from last year, when it finished 12th at the regatta.

The team placed third in the Northeastern Championship last year, which qualified them for the 1975 Ivey.

The regatta was held in Willoughby Island, Maine, and included 19 schools from the New England area.

The MIT team was composed of three men: Bruce Landis '77, Bob Nilsson '76, and Bill Critch '77, along with four members of the varsity team.

The team placed third overall in the regatta and is looking to improve its performance from last year's 12th place finish.

The regatta is held annually in the Willoughby Island area of Maine and is considered one of the most challenging sailing events in the New England region.
