Soccer falls to Tufts

By Greg Benton

The MIT soccer team lost 3-0 to Tufts in their second-to-last game of the season. Neither team played impressively in the game, yet Tufts managed to come out on top.

MIT played a rather lackluster first half, allowing Tufts to score three goals. The second half was better, yet the score remained the same. Both teams were limited to just one shot on goal in the second half, and started to control the play but could not score.

Tufts did not score a goal until the final time on a penalty kick late in the first half, behind 3-0, and were fighting to hold on to their lead and started to control the play but could not score.

The women's soccer team, with many questions about why the team played well defensively and yet looked slightly inferior to the performance by Tufts. The 3-0 halftime deficit was followed by an even more drab second half, with the uncoordinated man put on the field and the defense totally blocked.

Another poor performance in the second half, yet MIT still played more poorly than Tufts. One goal came when, after several deflections in front of the MIT goal, a Tufts player got a pass on the rebound and scored.

The next game will be home against Vermont, followed by a game against Colgate. The game will be against Vermont.
