News Analysis

Federal funds cut both ways

By Mike McNamee

The Department of Architecture is evaluating a "reallocation" of resources which might result in phasing-out most of the staff and courses offered by the Photographic section.
A proposal has been prepared for the department's Policy
Committee which recommends that the Creative Photography
Laboratory's functions be split between the Center for

While department officials insist that the "reallocation" will have no effect on the number of course offered or the facilities available to campus staff, members of the Photography Section, say it "really means
doing the labs as they now exist" and loss of most of the
lab's courses.

"What does the future hold for Creative Photography work such as this in the Architecture department?"

By Mike McNamee

The Department of Architecture is evaluating a "reallocation"
of resources which might result in phasing-out most of the staff and courses offered by the Photographic section.
A proposal has been prepared for the department's Policy
Committee which recommends that the Creative Photography
Laboratory's functions be split between the Center for

While department officials insist that the "reallocation" will
have no effect on the number of course offered or the facilities
available to campus staff, members of the Photography Section, say it "really means
doing the labs as they now exist" and loss of most of the
lab's courses.

"What does the future hold for Creative Photography work such as this in the Architecture department?"

By Mike McNamee

The Department of Architecture is evaluating a "reallocation"
of resources which might result in phasing-out most of the staff and courses offered by the Photographic section.
A proposal has been prepared for the department's Policy
Committee which recommends that the Creative Photography
Laboratory's functions be split between the Center for

While department officials insist that the "reallocation" will
have no effect on the number of course offered or the facilities
available to campus staff, members of the Photography Section, say it "really means
doing the labs as they now exist" and loss of most of the
lab's courses.

"What does the future hold for Creative Photography work such as this in the Architecture department?"

By Mike McNamee

The Department of Architecture is evaluating a "reallocation"
of resources which might result in phasing-out most of the staff and courses offered by the Photographic section.
A proposal has been prepared for the department's Policy
Committee which recommends that the Creative Photography
Laboratory's functions be split between the Center for

While department officials insist that the "reallocation" will
have no effect on the number of course offered or the facilities
available to campus staff, members of the Photography Section, say it "really means
doing the labs as they now exist" and loss of most of the
lab's courses.

"What does the future hold for Creative Photography work such as this in the Architecture department?"

By Mike McNamee

The Department of Architecture is evaluating a "reallocation"
of resources which might result in phasing-out most of the staff and courses offered by the Photographic section.
A proposal has been prepared for the department's Policy
Committee which recommends that the Creative Photography
Laboratory's functions be split between the Center for

While department officials insist that the "reallocation" will
have no effect on the number of course offered or the facilities
available to campus staff, members of the Photography Section, say it "really means
doing the labs as they now exist" and loss of most of the
lab's courses.

"What does the future hold for Creative Photography work such as this in the Architecture department?"

By Mike McNamee

The Department of Architecture is evaluating a "reallocation"
of resources which might result in phasing-out most of the staff and courses offered by the Photographic section.
A proposal has been prepared for the department's Policy
Committee which recommends that the Creative Photography
Laboratory's functions be split between the Center for

While department officials insist that the "reallocation" will
have no effect on the number of course offered or the facilities
available to campus staff, members of the Photography Section, say it "really means
doing the labs as they now exist" and loss of most of the
lab's courses.