Shagoury quits as UAPV--for real

Steve Shagoury '76 has decided to resign as Vice-President of the Undergraduate Association. According to one CVA staffer who knew Shagoury well, he had resigned because of a lack of communication between the two parties.

Shagoury's decision was first reported in The Tech on Feb. 10. After that, several other people told The Tech that he had resigned. However, when questioned about the resignation, Shagoury denied it. When asked about the resignation again, Shagoury said, "I don't know what you're talking about."

When Allen mentioned this to Shagoury last Thursday, according to Allen, Shagoury "reacted strongly," saying that student opinion would be heard.

Allen cited examples of things the UA had done in a positive direction, saying "that's the only thing I have to defend myself against Shagoury's allegations. He mentioned the two major public block parties, the release of the R/O week, and before Christmas I told him that the UA would do the same thing in the month of February and finance. The UA was in fine form at the bottom of the posters, "If you think that's the way it should be," Allen said.

This year's freshmen feel that R/O week was too mechanized, and plans are being made to reduce the time spent on the near future's freshmen. Upperclassmen, who were encouraged to participate in the week, say that they can provide freshmen with information on the activities.

The country's economic system will collapse because of the rise in the cost of capital and inefficiencies in the supply system. This, according to well-known author Barry Commoner, a professor of Plant Physiology at Columbia University, means that solar energy will solve all the country's energy problems.
