Fitting removal?

To the Editor:

I wish to thank James H. Williams, Jr., for summing up the feelings of virtually everyone that I've talked to about the sculpture in the great court. It does not belong there. I ask that MIT seriously consider removing the sculpture to a more fitting place, such as the Charles River. I personally find the sculpture interesting and transfixing as a piece of art, but its location is offensive. Totally.

Jeff Mitchell '76

MIT has become a more humane environment over the years, and it would be a big step forward to relegiate the Shower Ritual to the annals of the past.

Peter Bittror '61

Associate Dean for Student Affairs

October 7, '76

END SHOWER RITUAL

MIT has become a more humane environment over the years, and it would be a big step forward to relegiate the Shower Ritual to the annals of the past.

Peter Bittror '61

Associate Dean for Student Affairs

October 7, '76

MIT has become a more humane environment over the years, and it would be a big step forward to relegiate the Shower Ritual to the annals of the past.

Peter Bittror '61

Associate Dean for Student Affairs

October 7, '76