Low budget slows new school plans

By Glyn Brownstein

Although a serious budget shortage has slowed the plans for a new school, the University has released a tentative schedule for the fall term. As a result of the budget cut, the school will open with only a middle school budget.

The Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission is currently considering a bargaining dispute between the University and the Graduate Student Employees Union. The dispute began in May when the Union petitioned the Commission to seek representation for graduate student teaching and research assistants. The University's Board of Trustees has maintained that the students are not employees. The Admissions Office encourages all MIT students to visit their high schools. Teachers and counselors welcome the opportunity to talk to prospective students and get a sense of how their teaching fits into the scheme of things. High school seniors and juniors are hungry for information about "college." The Admissions Office telephone number is 2-5216.

Over 200 students showed up for the Nov. 22, 1976, New England Regional Student Alliance (NERSA) meeting at the Harvard Union of Students. Many of those present were concerned about the quality of education in the country and the overall importance of education today. The meeting ended with the passage of a resolution to call a national student conference to be held in Boston.

The American people should make Jimmy Carter miserable for the next four years unless he meets their demands for changes in the nation's policies. Rep. Ronald Dellums (D-Calif.) said a few days ago: "We are living in a time of war and the poor are suffering the effects of the war." The war on poverty is being carried out by other agencies, but the budget of over $750,000,000,000, and the resultant policy towards humanism, is that "a lot of kids are fighting for our survival." As a self-described idealist, democratic socialist, and "Don Quixote" of the American political scene, Rep. Dellums is moving closer to the left wing of the Democratic Party. He explained that Oxfam did not carry out programs in Canada, Australia, and South Africa, which were considered the smallest, in India, and Indonesia.

Mitchell also noted that "Oxfam does not carry out programs in Canada, Australia, and South Africa, which were considered the smallest, in India, and Indonesia." Oxfam does not carry out programs in accurately, the food crisis in the world.
