The MIT Symphony Orchestra has released a recording which includes Aaron Copland's "Dance Variations," which won the Grammy Award for Best Classical Recording Album of the Year.

The MIT Science and Technology Policy Program has released a report titled "The Future of Nuclear Power in the United States," which argues for the continued use of nuclear power as a viable energy source.

The Boston Globe reported that the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT) has initiated a new program called "Deadline," which aims to provide students with a platform to express their views on current events.

The MIT Department of Brain and Cognitive Sciences has announced that it will be offering a new course on the psychology of decision-making, which will explore the cognitive processes that underlie decision-making in various contexts.

The Committee on Engineering has approved a new policy that allows students to take up to two courses per term, provided they have the consent of their academic advisor and have fulfilled the prerequisites for the courses.

The MIT News Service has reported that a former MIT student was one of six people arrested in Nashua, New Hampshire, for circulating petitions to open a state liquor store in the city.

The MIT Committee on the Environment (COC) has recommended that the university adopt a new sustainability plan that includes a goal of reducing its carbon footprint by 20% by 2020.

The MIT Department of Electrical Engineering and Computer Science has announced that it will be offering a new course on artificial intelligence, which will explore the theoretical foundations and practical applications of AI.

The MIT Department of Media Arts and Sciences has launched a new program that will allow students to create and produce their own media content, with a focus on storytelling and multimedia production.

The MIT Department of Mechanical Engineering has announced that it will be offering a new course on renewable energy systems, which will cover the principles of energy conversion and storage and their applications in sustainable energy systems.

The MIT Department of Brain and Cognitive Sciences has announced that it will be offering a new course on the psychology of decision-making, which will explore the cognitive processes that underlie decision-making in various contexts.

The MIT Department of Media Arts and Sciences has launched a new program that will allow students to create and produce their own media content, with a focus on storytelling and multimedia production.