Kaye and Brown 'not fired'

By Thomas J. Spisak
Sanford Kaye and Joseph Brown, the electronics department's associate dean and chairman of the ad hoc evaluation committee which considered their cases, have not been fired, they were informed by Associate Dean Donald Blackmer of Humanities.

"They have not been fired, they have only been placed on leave," Blackmer said.

Blackmer added that rooms for Kaye and Brown to comply with requests for the necessary cooperation to complete the review. He then explained to Hanham that the ad hoc committee was unable to undertake its evaluation since it lacked the necessary cooperation from those being evaluated.

Kaye and Brown's cases have been reviewed by the ad hoc committee, which normally evaluates for promotion by the senior faculty in their area.

Hanham appointed a committee because of conflicts between members of the Writing Program and members of the Literature Section — those who would normally evaluate the Program staff.

"In the second week of October, all four cases [Kaye, Brown and Professors Patricia Cumming and Elizabeth Chodkowski] were asked through David Breakstone, the Acting Director of the Program and a member of the ad hoc committee, to submit resumes and a list of names of people whom we might contact as references," Blackmer explained.

On December 9, Blackmer informed Hanham that Kaye and Brown would not cooperate, the ad hoc committee could not evaluate their teaching.

The evaluations of Professors Cumming and Chodkowski, who cooperated with the committee from early October, proceeded.

On November 3, the committee had been announced.

By Thomas J. Spisak
Sanford Kaye and Joseph Brown, the electronics department's associate dean and chairman of the ad hoc evaluation committee which considered their cases, have not been fired, they were informed by Associate Dean Donald Blackmer of Humanities.

"They have not been fired, they have only been placed on leave," Blackmer said.

Blackmer added that rooms for Kaye and Brown to comply with requests for the necessary cooperation to complete the review. He then explained to Hanham that the ad hoc committee was unable to undertake its evaluation since it lacked the necessary cooperation from those being evaluated.

Kaye and Brown's cases have been reviewed by the ad hoc committee, which normally evaluates for promotion by the senior faculty in their area.

Hanham appointed a committee because of conflicts between members of the Writing Program and members of the Literature Section — those who would normally evaluate the Program staff.

"In the second week of October, all four cases [Kaye, Brown and Professors Patricia Cumming and Elizabeth Chodkowski] were asked through David Breakstone, the Acting Director of the Program and a member of the ad hoc committee, to submit resumes and a list of names of people whom we might contact as references," Blackmer explained.

On December 9, Blackmer informed Hanham that Kaye and Brown would not cooperate, the ad hoc committee could not evaluate their teaching.

The evaluations of Professors Cumming and Chodkowski, who cooperated with the committee from early October, proceeded.

On November 3, the committee had been announced.