Writing Program chronology

June 17, 1976 — The Sloan Report is submitted to Hanham. In it, the Committee on Evaluation of the Writing Program said that it was "strongly of the opinion that the directions and achievements of the Writing Program’s pilot endeavor." Among several other recommendations, the Committee advised that the Program be removed from the purview of the Department of Humanities, that the Program’s pilot endeavor be concluded, and that the Program be removed from the Department of Humanities.

Sept. 28, 1976 — Hanham and Blackmer meet with President Jerome Weisner, Gray, and Provost Walter Rosenblith to discuss the organization of the School.

Oct. 1, 1976 — Hanham sends a letter to Blackmer, Blackmer, and the other suggested members of the Writing Program’s Board of Directors, discussing the possibility of the Program being reactivated.

Dec. 13, 1976 — Hanham sends a letter to Kaye and Brown, with copies going to Weisner, Gray, Rosenblith, Blackmer, Maida, and Sivin and John Whynne, Vice Presidents of the University. Hanham writes, "I believe that you have put your program as thoroughly in the writing that it is now impossible for me or for any responsible MIT committee to recommend you for a further appointment at MIT."

Dec. 14, 1976 — Breakstone tells the Program members through a letter that the Program has been dismissed. Hanham meets with Kaye and Brown, and tells them that he will give them a letter of recommendation.

Nov. 29, 1976 — Kaye and Brown write to Wiesner informing him of the decision outlined in the Oct. 1 letter until Dec. 14, and that they do not fear of Wiesner’s Gray’s, and Rosenblith’s involvement until Mar. 17.
