Writing story faulted

To the Editor:
I would like to correct the record the respect with to a statement attributed to me in last Friday's issue of The Tech (April 29). Mr. Koretz quoted a memoir written by me in November 1975 as follows:

"In that memoir he expressed that 'we should... teach creative writing to a similarly limited number... and offer rigorous elective or distribution courses in expository writing for as many of the rest of the student body as is interested.'"

The memoir in question was addressed to the Committee to Evaluate the Writing Program at an early stage of its deliberations in order to raise issues which I, and others, believed the Committee should consider. One of those issues was whether as future writing program might conceivably have goals other than those professed by the Pilot Writing Program. The passage in question reads as follows:

"One plausible answer is to say that we should provide remedial training for a small number of the most disadvantaged (perhaps even as a requirement), teach creative writing to a similarly limited number... and offer rigorous elective or distribution courses in expository writing for as many of the rest of the student body as is interested."

Mr. Koretz has regretfully missed his correction.

We regret any misrepresentation or aggravation it may have caused.

To the Editor:
We wish to correct two factual errors in our letter of April 27. First, in the second paragraph from the bottom on the second page reads, "She responded in anger...", as Dave has just read the final copy and informed us that Dean Seelinger was, in fact, not angry. He had corrected this in our rough draft, but we regretfully missed his correction.
