Kendall Square fire kills driver, halts MBTA

By Steve Kirsch
The Sixth Annual J. Edgar Hoover Memorial Dope Party took place without much fanfare Friday afternoon at the Great Court. There were no arrests at the Party — there never have been. This is not due to any special arrangements, but a result of the Cambridge Police. "Nothing at all," says Harvard police Chief James C. O'Brien, who has seen the party several times. "It's held in the park, and the police officers just keep an eye on it."

According to police, the Party has been held on the first Friday in May for as long as anyone can remember. The tradition is said to have started in 1975, when a group of Harvard students decided to throw a party in a "fine spring day" and smoke. The tradition has continued ever since, and is now considered a Cambridge institution.

The Party is held on the first Friday in May, and is attended by hundreds of people. The police officers are on hand to keep an eye on things, but they don't interfere with the Party unless something unusual happens. This year, a driver died when a MBTA bus crashed into a building, causing a fire. The fire killed the driver and caused damage to the building. The Party was shut down immediately, and the police officers on hand acted quickly to control the situation.

(above left) Flames and smoke rose high into the air above the burning gasoline truck in Kendall Square Saturday. The thick cloud of black smoke could be seen for miles. (above right) After the blaze was extinguished by Cambridge firefighters, there was nothing left of the tank truck but a gutted hull. (below) The side entrance of MBTA Power Station No. 3 was blasted by incredible heat as 8,500 gallons of fuel erupted into flames.
