Rhodesians support Smith — Rhodesian President Ian Smith has been given a huge mandate by his country's white electorate in national elections held yesterday. Smith hopes to gain enough parliamentary seats to allow him to put his plan for a power-sharing arrangement with moderate black Rhodesians into effect.

Nation
Additives suspected — The United States Department of Agriculture and the Food and Drug Administration are asking manufacturers of prepared meats to submit reports concerning the use of nitrates and nitrites as preservatives. The chemicals have been suspected of generating cancer-causing nitrosamines in the stomach when consumed.

Court may decide Kent State controversy — A Kent State University group, the May 4th Coalition, is filing a brief in the United States Supreme Court in an effort to stop construction of a gymnasium on the site where four students were killed by Ohio National Guard members on May 4, 1970.

Trying times for Class of 1906

knew something was wrong for everyone laughed, the professor excepted, of course. Then occurred the following dialogue. I answered his questions by "Yes" and "No, sir," as I thought they ought to be answered. Many of them I found not at all were wrong.

"Can't you hear me?" "No, sir."
"What is the number of which 3/4: is the logarithm?"
"No, sir."
"Are you deaf?" "No, sir."
"Didn't you hear me?" "Yes, sir."
"Then answer the question." "No, sir."

Then angrily "Sit down." I heard this last as it was said more forcibly than the former ones. I had noticed that all the sections were laughing and that with the successive questions had so rattled me that I was so confused I couldn't have told my name if I had been asked. I wasn't called on again that hour.

Soon the recitation closed much to my relief, and I found out then what I had done. Meanwhile I am keeping a wide tract of land between myself and that professor in the hopes that when he finds me in the front seat at the next recitation he won't recognize me.
